Sir James Cleminson, president of the Confederation of British Industry, commented on the speed of the Government's reaction to the EMS changes, but he added: Our borrowing costs are still higher than those of our major competitors and we look forward to single-figure interest rates later this year."

The rapid cut in base rates was taken in the City as a sign that the authorities were determined not to allow the pound to remain too strong. Analysts saw it as a reassuring indication of the Government's policy on exchange rates.

Newcastle upon Tyne

The Royal Navy's latest warship was launched in secret vesterday to foil a shipyard strike in an operation finalized over after-dinner brandy with senior Admiralty officers.

At 3.45am, 12 hours earlier than scheduled, the type 22 frigate, HMS Coventry, built to replace her destroyer namesake sunk in the Falklands with a loss of 19 lives, was slipped into the River Tyne by a 100-strong management team from the Swan Hunter yard.

The undercover plan had been drawn up by senior management who feared that a demonstration by some of the 2,000 workers who walked out on unofficial strike in a pay and conditions dispute would disrupt and delay the planned ceremony.

They were determined to deliver the £100 million frigate on time to further their claim for a £240 million Ministry of Defence order for two new vessels against their rivals Harland and Wolff in Belfast.

The secret launch ceremo ny, conducted in driving rain and gale force winds under special floodlights in a deserted shipyard, took place shortly before a Cabinet committee met to discuss the order for the two auxillary oil replenishment vessels.

In the event, the economic committee postponed a decision for at least another week because of deep divisions among ministers.

After the launch Mr Alex Marsh, a managing director, said: "We had been worried that a small section of our workforce were not prepared to launch the ship and that there could demonstration.

There was controversy and some sympathy at Westminster yesterday about the leak of Mrs Dunwoody's unpaid House of Commons catering bills, which amount to more than £2,000.

Labour whips have been asked by the Commons catering subcommittee to encourage her to settle the bills quickly. Mr Charles Irving, the chair-man, denied that it was planning to take legal action.

Mrs Dunwoody, who said that she would not be seeing the whips about the unpaid catering bill because it would be settled later this week, said that a "malevolent" anonymous phone caller was behind the revelations. As an MP she receives a

Now there's only one place to save if you're going overseas.

If you are intending to live or work outside the U.K. for a while, there's great news which will help you get more from your building society savings.

Now all investors who are not ordinarily resident in the U.K. for tax purposes can receive all building society interest gross instead of net. In simple terms, that means you get more interest because there's no tax to pay.

And what better way to enjoy this benefit than with the Halifax, the world's No. 1 building society. While you're away your money can build up safely, and you'll be assured of a healthier return. And that's not just because the interest is paid tax-free.

As the major provider of mortgages in Britain, the Halifax can set you up for a better future when the time comes to invest your hard earned cash in a new home.

PARLIAMENT APRIL 8 1986

Mr Tom King, Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, repeatedly called on all political leaders in Northern Ireland, including some Westminster MPs, to condemn the present violence against members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and their families. When he enticized Mr Enoch Powell for not including a condemnation in his question Mr Powell shouted: Everyone

Mr King made a statement on the safety of RUC members and their families in which he said there had been 138 attacks on off-duty members of the RUC and RUC reserve, their homes and families in the past month. He condemned the attacks as cowardly and disgraceful.

He said that the Chief Constable of Northern Ireland, with the full support of the police authority and of the Superintendents Association and the Police Federation, had put in hand arrangements to provide quick and effective assistance to police officers and families subject to intimidation.

Extra parols were being mounted in vulnerable areas and steps had been taken to provide suitable alternative mmedation for those unfortunate enough to have to police were also making strenuous efforts to bring those responsible for this criminal behaviour to justice. A considerable number had been charged with serious offences associated Mr Peter Archer, chief Oppo-

Violence appeared to stem from those in a particular political position who had expected the police to administer the law in a discriminating way and their respect for law had evaporated when they had discovered that they, too, were to be subject to the law. Those who warned that plastic bullets were a dangerous method of crowd control had been shown to be right by the injuries to Keith White recently. He asked for consideration of a Labour suggestion that there should be a special scheme of compensation for police and others whose jobs involved special risk. Mr King: I am in no doubt that

He knew of one officer who had been attacked and had been reported on the radio as saying that the effect would be, not to undermine morale, but to make the RUC stick together more closely as a family against terorrism, as they had for 17 years, and that they would not stop now because the terrorism came from a different quarter. He understood the problems and difficulties of plastic bullets but was not prepared to see the police defenceless against that sort of violence, although he regretted the sort of injuries which had been caused to Mr White even though he had been Sir John Biggs-Davison (Epping Forest. House and the men and women of the RUC how it is that protection specifically asked for and specifically promised was not forthcoming until after the petrol bombers had struck? Mr King: It is for the Unionist MPs or whoever he has in mind to respond to his first point, but I have noted the comments made elsewhere on that matter.

On the second point, he is referring to the Under-Secretary's reply that if resources and help were needed and asked for they would be given. It is precisely what we are oing at the request of the Chief Mr Merlyn Rees (Leeds, South and Morley, Lab): Where the situation is getting worse every day, where the politicians do not count, and where, whatever the reason, they dare not put their heads above the political para-pet, would he ask the Prime Minister to go on television and talk to the people of Northern Ireland as Prime Minister and leader of the Conservative and Unionist Party, explaining that the people over there can have any views they like about the Anglo-Irish Agreement, a politi-cal agreement, but the RUC have become a British police force that is there for one reason to uphold the laws on violence and that is what they are doing? Mr King: The Prime Minister will have noted his comments During his and other MPs terms of office as Northern Ireland Secretary more than 200 members of the RUC have laid down their lives in defence of Province against terrorism and they are entitled to the support of everybody in the Kingdom.

If the politicians do not count any more it is perhaps because it has not yet been possible to get discussions going. This is a political matter which needs to be discussed by politicians and not tackled by men of violence. That is why it is so important that we get early discussions. Mr Ian Gow (Eastbourne, C): On these benches those who support and those who oppose the Anglo-Irish Agreement join with him in condemning totally attacks on members of the RUC. Mr Stephen Ross (Isle of Wight, L): We hope he will continue to see the agreement through to its fulfilment. It is the only sane way forward in Northern Ireland. Is protected accommoda-tion being made available to the RUC at this time, so that they can move in with their families if they so wish?

Mr King said he would rather not go into details about the Mr Roy Mason (Barnsley Cen-tral, Lab): Much of this violence must weigh heavily on the shoulders of the Unionist lead ers. Firm leadership should be given to stop this mass intimida Unionist leaders spoke out. Mr King: I hope his message will be heard by others who will recognize the responsibility that they clearly have. Mr Ivor Stanbrook (Orpington, C): Every responsible person condemns violence, but when the Government decided to sign the agreement was any assess-ment made as to the scale and violence of the likely reaction among the majority population of Northern Ireland? If so, is he really surprised at what has happened? If not, why not? Mr King: I am sure he does not seek to imply that violence could be justified. I hope I will get his support on the need for talks now to take place. I hope we can get discussions going so that we can find a sensible and law-abiding way to resolve these difficulties.

Mr John Hume (Foyle, SDLP) said that loyalist MPs who consistently lectured about law and order now stood exposed: they meant their law and order. Some honourable members he used the word "honourable" only because he was obliged to do so - were engaged in organizing and encouraging violence in an outright campaign against the democratic process so that decent people would no

Mr Powell, who had presented himself for most of this century as an upholder of sovereignty, had abandoned that each are the control of the century and centur that today and so had aban-doned the rule of law.

Mr King said some MPs had stood up bravely and condemned violence against the RUC despite risks to themselves. Others had not felt able to do so. He would not comment on the point about the organization of violence. Mr Patten: I would like to give that assurance. I know of the concern about the syllabus. There is no reason why proper choices should not be made on the basis of available information, including national criteria and the draft syllabus which have been in schools for some

Mr Alan Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed, L) said few teachers would recognize the state of preparedness. Most parents at this stage would rather not apportion blame. They were more more concerned about ensuring that their children were idequately prepared for the examination.

Postponement had to be much more seriously considered

Mr Patten: Postponement would lead to the very chaos its supporters seem to fear. That is overwhelmingly the case. Most fair-minded heads and teachers would accept that there has been more preparation for this change than there was for the introduction of GCE 'O' levels. the CSE or the raising of the school leaving age.

(Our new Terminal opens on April 12, 1986.)

From Saturday, there'll be a fast new way to leave the country. Heathrow's new Terminal 4.

All British Airways flights to Paris and Amsterdam and all their Intercontinental services including Concorde, will take off from there. As will all KLM, NLM and Air Malta flights.

But if you're using our new Terminal, there's something you ought to know.

It can't be reached the same way as Terminals 1, 2 and 3.

So it's more important than ever to know which Terminal to report to.

And if it's Terminal 4, how to get there.

By car, that means following the special road signs on the motorways. By bus, it means getting off at the Terminal 4 stop.

By tube, it means using the new Terminal 4 station between Hatton Cross and Heathrow Central.

Terminal 4 cost £200 million to build. (Not a penny of it, by the way, from the pockets of tax payers.)

We think it's one of the best airport terminals in Europe.

"We are more and more aware that we cannot expect solutions to our demands without a democratic change in our country," he said. Meanwhile, the national committee of bishops has published a statement calling for "serious revision" of the 1980 constitution adopted by the military regime.

Tegucigalpa (UPI) - Presi-dent José Azcona Hoyo of Honduras said his govern-ment did not ask Washington for $20 million (about £13.5 million) in military aid to fend off an alleged Nicaraguan Army invasion on its border. President Reagan, citing the seriousness of aggression from a "communist dictatorship," sent $20 million in emergency military aid to Señor Azcona saying the money was requested to repel the attack. The Government of President José Azcona Hoyo did not request military aid from the US Government as has been much speculated in the national and international press," a presidential palace statement said. "It is completely false." It said the only request made to Washington was "for the use of air transport to rapidly move Honduran troops to the sectors where the Sandinista Popular Army crossed over". The announcement of an "invasion" of Honduras by troops from leftist-ruled Nicaragua came from Washington on March 24. The incursion of some 1,500 Nicaraguan troops der in pursuit of US-backed Contra rebels came on the eve of a Senate vote on President Reagan's $100 million aid package for the rebels.

A day later, the Govern-ment of Honduras, a staunch US ally, which at first vigorously denied the reports, said the Sandinista had "crossed into" western Olancho prov-ince. Shortly thereafter, Señor Azcona left for a Caribbean beach holiday.

There was much conjecture among foreign diplomats that Washington exaggerated the Nicaraguan border raid to try to sway the Senate to vote in favor of Reagan's Contra aid proposal.

Also in the presidential statement, Señor Azcona denounced statements by President Daniel Ortega, of Nicaragua, who said Sandinista troops did not violate the border but rather entered a "no-man's land" where Contra rebels have bases.

"On the Honduran-Nicaraguan border, there does not exist nor can there exist a socalled 'no-man's land' because the border was clearly marked for perpetuity by the Spanish King on December 23, 1906.

Museveni to fight corruption

From Charles Harrison

President Uganda, is launching a major operation against widespread corruption in government and semi-government services which has existed for many years as a result of the economic breakdown which began when General Idi Amin took power in 1971. It was announced in Kam-pala that a commission of inquiry would soon be set up to look into the activities of owned bodies.

In response to what the government said was a public outery, the commission will investigate financial scandals and abuse of office. Members of the public will be invited to give evidence.

General Museveni has been bitterly critical of the way corruption, which reached alarming levels under General Amin in the 1970s, had been allowed to continue under the rule of General Milton Obote, who was ousted last July by a section of his own Army.

playing the Stock Exchange.

But potentially there's a great deal of money to be made there.

And nowadays it's possible to take advantage of it without risking too much.

You can do this by putting some of your money into a Unit Trust.

That way, your money would be invested for you in the stocks and shares of companies considered to be the success stories of the future by a team of professional fund managers.

Over the last five years, £1,000 invested in the average Unit Trust increased to £2,412 compared to £1,461 for the typical Building Society investment (source: Money Management March 1986).*

Of course, past performance is not necessarily a guide to the future.

But since their Homen don't have to dress like a tillion dollars to push Next shares up debut over 50 years over 100p in the last 12 month ago, Unit Trusts have regularly shown excellent long term growth and are therefore increasingly highly regarded by experts in investment. What are Unit Trusts?

A Unit Trust is a large pool of money, made up of hundreds of individuals

Your share of this pool is made up of Units, and you can own as many as you like subject to a minimum holding.

Obviously, like stocks and shares, the value of Unit Trusts and the income from them can go down as well as up, > Fortunately the spread of investments is wide enough (never less than 20 companies) to ensure your money isn't all tied up in just one area.

Who should I invest with? With so many different Unit

Trusts to choose from, it's probably wise to invest with someone you know and trust. As Britain's largest fund management company, the Prudential certainly falls into this category.

And the Prus skill in Unit Trusts is already producing healthy returns for

The Prudential's Holborn International Growth Trust has increased in value from 50p since launch on 31st December 1984, to 87.5p on 20th March 1986, (offer to bid basis).

Which means, if you had sold after that period, you would have achieved a 75% growth on your investment in just over one year.

However, it's best to plan on keeping your money in for three years or more, to give it the opportunity to grow.

But if you want, you can cash this in whenever you like, and expect your money in less than a week.

What do I have to do?

Understandably, before committing either yourself or your money, you'll want to know a little more about Unit

Like the ins and outs of taxation, what charges are made and, generally, a more detailed account of how we handle your money.

Finney bubbles back

Albert Finney's considerable energy has been harnessed by an American play that brings him back to the West End tonight

lbert Finney is loping around the bar of the Apollo Theatre in Shaftesbury Avenue like a racehorse kept too long under starter's orders. "Forgive me if I stand up and walk about", he says.

"It's all this energy."

There is indeed plenty of energy here—a barrel-chested Charlie Bubbles a quarter of a century on, now finding himself in the pivotal role of a traumatic American drama making the transition from Hampstead Theatre to the West End. He opens tonight in Orphans, a three-hander written by Lyle Kessler and first produced in Chicago and New York by the Steppenwolf Theatre Company.

"I feel like a two-year-old feel like a two-year-old again", says Finney, who is thinking in equine rather than human terms. "No, I feel like an English musician who's gone to New Orleans and put his head inside a jazz club and has heard this fantastic Dixieland music coming from the stage. And I've fallen in love with it. It's not that I was jaded before, I just didn't know what I was going to do." At least in terms of his immediate future. Finney has found the answer. For the next 12 weeks he will be playing the role of Harold, a Chicago con-man kidnapped by a young crook in an old house in north Philadelphia, and who, rather like the interloper in a Pinter play, envelopes the menage

The question has to be asked: what was an actor of Finney's magnitude doing in a nice little theatre like Hampstead, without, at that stage, the guarantee of a West End transfer? "The point about Hampstead", he says, " is that it's a little like being on the road. I don't mean to be rude when I say that. It was the right size. It had the same capacity as the Steppenwolf Theatre in Chicago and the West Side Arts in New York to which it transferred."

As a company, Steppenwolf is noted for the sheer energy with which it invests its productions. When it acquired Albert Finney for the part of Harold in Orphans it was compounding the endemic tension of its approach with the essentially English acting style of Finney himself.

Apart from The Biko Inquest and Sergeant Musgrave's Dance. Finney has not been on the stage for seven years, but working on films in England and the United States. "I have been on what you might call a sabbatical for 20 months, unsure what to do next. That is often the case in a fallow spell. You wonder what on earth it is going to be that is going to

"I own some thoroughbred racehorses in New York state. Not long ago I was staying in Long Island with some friends, where there are two racetracks. And Michael Medwin, who's head of Memorial Productions, rang me up and said there was a part which he thought might suit me. Now, as fate would have it. I was going to Manhattan in the next few days, and I went and saw the play, and by the interval I had decided that I wanted to be involved with these people...it was like hearing a different kind of jazz, played by different musicians."

Seeing Finney perform on the play's last night at Hampstead, one was struck by the spectacle of an actor of this stature making the journey, albeit a hazardous one, back to the roots of his trade, and exposing himself to an entirely new set of influences.

"But for me", Finney recalls, "it was something that enabled me to regain my sea-legs, having been off the stage for so long. In some ways I was rather tense. You see, as well as being in the play, as well as fitting into the style, I had much to answer for, because I was responsible for bringing it over here, and I hadn't realized how tense it would make me feel. That anxiety, which is quite deep, but which is covered over by the demands of doing a show, slowly starts to emerge, and it wasn't until the end of the third week that I found I could feel at all relaxed."

Even after 30 years in the business, Finney remains an obsessive actor, living and breathing the material of the moment. "In a way, this was a godsend for me, because Jeff Fahey, who plays the part of the elder orphan, was new to the cast, the same as I was. So it was a terrific help to see the director Gary Sinise work with him...how he could instill into him that intensity of feeling."
One strange thing about

'It was something that enabled me to regain my sea legs'

Finney's re-emergence on the London stage is that it should bein an American role - admittedly one for which he has done long hours of homework. But he does not share the sense of surprise. "When I was doing Luther, I used to go to monasteries and sit with the brothers, just to see what it was like, all those men sitting and eating with each other. For this one, well, I remember all the dead-end kids in the films with Bogart, and that tradition of gangsters with people like Cagney and Tracey. I also had a tape made for me by someone from Steppenwolf with four Chicagoans talking, and I listened to it over and over again.

"And of course I've been living in New York, so I hear them talking, every time I take a cab to work. I have my ear as an actor. Actually I think I once blew a film deal in LA because a guy who ran the studio had an intrusive S sound — is that it? — and I listened to him absolutely fascinat-ed, and suddenly found myself saying to him shimply shmashing', just because I'd been watching his mouth move, and imitating it to myself. I couldn't

"But, you see, my generation of kids, we used to imitate all the movie stars. If there was a Jolson movie in town, then we'd do Jolson, if it was Bogey, we'd do Bogey, and so on."

Orphans is a draining theatrical experience, for the cast no less than the audience, and Finney would have it no other way. It chronicles a sea-change of domestic responsibilities between a street criminal elder brother and the sibling whom he has kept, in every sense, in the dark, in order to enhance his own sense of indispensibility in the absence of a bona fide parent. All this is called into question by the advent of a "kidnap victim" eager to impart his own street-wisdom evenhandedly to both boys. "I don't argue that this is the beall and end all". Finney says, "but I do say that it's one of those special theatrical experiences you get every once in a while. You want every job to be like this, and to fire you in a particular way. I'll tell you why I believed it impor-tant for Steppenwolf to bring the show over more or less in the form in which it was done in America. Go back to West Side Story. When that arrived, it was a revelation to English dancers to see a US dance company doing the things it did for the four months prior to its replacement. If the English dancers hadn't seen it, they wouldn't have known what the Americans were talking about."

When he tries to analyse the style of Steppenwolf's Gary Sinise, director of Orphans, Finney goes back to 1959, when he was understudying Olivier in Cariolanus. "After having done four or five performances in the part, I became aware of the fact that a great actor can take a role with a wide range, and make it even wider. Olivier himself had laid down a very clear blueprint, and so it was not the easiest thing to understudy. If there had been two comparative graphs, mine would have been wobbling around on the equator, but Olivier's would have consisted of great sweeps up and down to both the poles. I believe that Gary Sinise is doing an Olivier on the directorial level, pushing his actors to the very extremes of emotion."

hese days Finney the nag fancier may no longer be the champing yearling he once was on his first cultish furlongs of the Fifties, but he remains decidedly sprightly, eager for new courses. He traces his love of horses back to boyhood in Salford, where his father and grandfather before him ran a bookmaker's. The thing about racing is that it's adrenalin-producing and you don't have to make an effort yourself. It's thrilling without your having to 'put out' as they say. . . "In middle-age in this business you can get fuddy-duddy. I've always felt that with the so-called new wave people say: 'everything's going to change'. And then it gets written off as a movement, the idea of a spearhead cultural assault, and then after that the actors go their own way and it all settles down: I just believe in work in progress. It's a life. One of the things I love is that I don't know what I'll be doing in six months time. I have this sense of loyalty to a piece of work."

Trouble brewing

The cost of the coffee in your cup is going up. Droughts, ed disasters natural and nmade have pushed up world coffee prices to their highest levels for a decade. Supermarket prices have risen twice this year already, and more increases are on the way. The increases reflect a virtual doubling of world raw or 1985 coffee fetched about 136 cents a pound. By January this year it was 198 cents, and futures prices - the amount traders expect to pay in three months time - are 250 cents. So what is happening? The answer is a graphic example of the chain linking a raw material with the final consumer and the first link is the coffee tree, of which there are two main types - arabica and robusta.

The finest and most expensive coffees are often arabicas, which are mainly used for roasted and ground beans. Robustas are turned into instant coffee. But all coffees are grown between the tropics of Cancer and Capricorn in areas of high rainfall. They need slopes for drainage, plenty of sua to ripen the fruit (which develops into the familiar bean), and steady warmth between 25 and 30 degrees

Sodden changes in temperature can wreak havoc. Most of the coffee-growing regions of Brazil suffered drought during the critical early months of the flowering and pollination which produces the coffee berries, and the damage has been spectacular. Production - some 30 million bags in 1984/5 — may be as low as combined with wars in Uganda and Angola, and earthquakes and floods in Latin America. to disrupt the balance between supply and demand on the world market. There is also the fear is that a frost in the middle of the year - the southern hemisphere winter could inflict more damage. In theory, limits to coffee prices are set by the laternawhich has 75 exporting and importing members. But the recent rise has been so explosive that it burst through the ICO's ceiling of 150 cents a pound. Attempts to control the price have been suspended. Only when the industry is confident of a good Brazilian crop again will prices fall.

And though many of the changes were initiated before the takeover battle, Watson says that there is no doubt that the company has benefited from the experience, unpleasant and nerve-wracking though it was.

"One effect was that pushed us centre stage with the spotlight firmly on us", he says. "We are still quite a small company but these days we are in a different league. City analysts come to visit us and we are discussed and talked about."

The other tangible by-product is financial. In two years, as Maxwell struggled for control. the company's shares rose fourfold: a £10 million company in early 1983 be-came a £40 million one by the end of 1984. When it was all over Waddington used its new-found financial muscle to make a couple of friendly takeovers of its own. Last December it acquired an American plastics company.

Two hours later the formal bid arrived. Maxwell was offering 240p per share, which valued the company at around £12 million, slightly better than the Norton Opax bid. The next step was to assemble all the shop stewards and other representatives in the canteen and to make an unashamed appeal for loyalty and solidarity. As a former Maxwell employee, David Perry, the managing director and former England rugby international, voiced his lack of enthusiasm, and was supported by a union official who had also once worked for a taken over by company

Progress brings its own dilemma for the childless, Thomson Prentice writes

[علدًا منه الماجل

The test tube maybe

The bright clusters of snapshots pinned to the memo board in a London clinic are a constant reminder that at least some dreams come true. Every picture of a new-born baby tells its. own story of a successfulfight against infertility.

More than anything else in her life. Tessa Horton wants to add to that collection. But she is 38 now and after five years of disappointment, she knows the odds are against her.

Neither she nor her husband
Michael will surrender their dream while the doctors continue to offerthem even a slender hope. "I tend to live from one appointment to the next", she says, after travelling 40 miles from her Surrey home to see a specialist in the clinic at Hammersmith Hospital.

For the Hortons, and an estimated one million other couples in Britain striving to overcome childlessness doctors can resort to a remarkable and increasing number of treatments. Advances in the use of drugs surgical techniques and in vitro fertilization, mean that babies are now being born to couples who until described as hopeless cases.

Failure to ovulate may be responsible for between 20 and 30 per cent of all infertility, but it is one of the most successful areas for treatment with quite recently would have been drugs.

Menstrual cycles are controlled by the pituitary and hypothalamus; glands in the brain. Ovulation depends on the complex interplay of the pituitary hormone PSH (folliclestimulating hormone) and the hormone oestrogen in the ovary.

Unless this delicate relationship is precisely balanced, a women is unlikely to ovulate and thus cannot

The drug clomiphene is an antioestrogen that has been used for many years and is highly successful in inducing ovulation by causing a rise in the production of FSH and LH (luteinizing hormone), another important pithitary chemical.

Other fertility drugs are based on the gonadotrophin hormones which

Side effects range from miscarriages to multiple births

act directly and with great effectiveness on the ovary. Recent refinements have led to the use of small pumps, placed under the skin, which release regulated pulses of hormones into the patient's bloodstream throughout the meastrual cycle. Successful as fertility drugs are, there are inevitably side effects. Depending on the drug, the dosage and the patient, these may range from miscarriage to multiple births of four

For some women, the risk of having too many babies is preferable to the prospect of having none. Doctors are continuing to research means of reducing that risk, and today the birth of more than twins as a result of fertility drugs is considered

There have been advances, too, in surgery to repair blocked or damaged fallopian tubes. Conventional surgery has been almost completely replaced by microsurgery. Using a microscope and the finest electrical instruments, the surgeon can reverse sterilizations. and unblock or repair the damaged

Such surgery has been successful in up to three out of four cases, but even so the overall live birth rate resulting from it has been as low as about 13 per cent. However, some surgeons are now applying lasers to tubal surgery. Mr

Simon Wood, a consultant maecologist at the Royal Devon and Exeter Hospital, has achieved a 33 per cent live birth rate in a small number of patients by using a laser.

He performs the operation, known as a salpingostomy, guiding a laser beam with a microscope, to remove blockages at the outer ends of the fallopian tubes. There is no tissue damage caused by the laser and therefore less chance of the blockage recurring", he says.

Following the operation, one patient, Mrs Shona Ankers, 25, of Exeter, succeeded in becoming preg-nant and earlier this month gave birth to a son. She and her husband Stephen, 27, agreed to the surgery as an alternative to seeking in vitro

Unfortunately, neither drugs nor surgery are as effective in treating infertile men at they are in women patients. Most male disorders are entirely untreatable, although some encouraging progress has been made in the last few years.

Surgery can be successful in reversing vasectomies, but fully restored the cases. Researchers in the United States have found that deterioration of the testicles can occur in otherwise healthy men following a vasectomy.

This new finding, reported last November, follows other research indicating that the body's immune system produces an anti-sperm antibody following vasectomy.

About 10 per cent of infertile men are believed to produce antibodies to their own sperm; but treatment to counteract this condition has been developed at the Chelsea Hospital for Women and St Bartholemew's Hospital, London, and elsewhere.

A success rate of 33 per cent in pregnancies has been achieved so far. Scores of drugs are available to try to increase sperm production and improve sperm quality, but in the opinion of one leading specialist, none of them has shown any significant advantage.

For many infertile men and women, the well-publicized developments in in vitro fertilisation appear to offer the greatest hope. But just what are their chances of having a test-tube baby? Since the birth of Louise Brown in Oldham in 1978, more than 2,000 test-tube babies have been born around the world. Last year, the first frozen embryo baby was born in

Last month, Britzin's first frozen embryo baby, Gregory Jackson, was born to his 34 year old mother and her schoolteacher husband, as a result of in vitro fertilization treatment at the Bourn Hall clinic, near Cambridge, of IVF pioneers Dr Robert

Edwards and Mr Patrick Steptoe. In Britain, America and Australia, many hundreds of embryos are now stored in liquid nitrogen tanks at 200 degrees C below zero. They are the potential children of infertile couples who have undergone IVF treatment. Some embryos produced through-

IVF have been donated to other childless couples. The freezing and storage of sperm has also been ber, Australian scientists announced they were the first team to successfully freeze and thaw human ova, which can subsequently be fertilized in-

But despite the extraordinary advances. IVF treatment is still much more likely to fail than succeed. Only about 15 per cent of patients produce babies as a result, although research has shown that women's expectations are up to three times higher.

"Test-tube baby treatment should be seen as the last resort, usually appropriate only when all else has failed", says Mr Robert Winston, director of infertility clinic and IVF programme at Hammersmith

Hospital 'It is one of the least successful of all fertility treatments and has taken attention away from other treatments which are usually far more likely to be That view is challenged by Dr Edwards and Mr Steptoe at Bourn Hall. "We don't believe IVF should be seen as a last resort. It has a very important place in the treatment of infertility and deserves more recogni-tion as such", Dr Edwards says.

Professional rivalry is intense among IVF specialists and it is common to hear criticisms of one unit's work by scientists in another. Edwards and Steptoe have been especially critical of the practice by some clinics of replacing three or more fertilized eggs in the mother's womb to increase the chances of a live

They believe that this practice reduces the chances of all the embryos surviving to maturity, endangers the health of the mother, and may result in a multiple birth of premature

And the impact on a childless couple of becoming the parents of up to four infants may be extremely stressful, they say Last October, a retired art historian, Mr Tony del Renzio, aged 70, found himself in such a situation. His wife Doris, 38. gave birth to two girls and two boys after IVF treatment at Hammersmith Hospital

I must admit we would have been happier if we had been able to have just one baby", Mr del Renzio says. "But we were warned about the risk of a multiple birth, and we took that

The babies were the third set of quads to be born following IVF at Hammersmith in the last four years. Many more single births there have also resulted from the treatment.

Mr Winston, the clinic's director, agrees that multiple births should be avoided, but argues that until techniques are improved through research, it is reasonable to offer patients the maximum chance of a baby with the least number of attempts. Such techniques are likely to be much more successful within the next few years as new research yields its

Undoubtedly the skills of special-ICI AS PTOTESSOT B to better treatment and benefits to other forms of infertility. Much depends, however, on research, and it is research on human embryos which has aroused the fiercest controversy. The recommendation from the Warnock committee that restricted research should be permitted under the regulations of a statutory licensing authority has failed to impress many opponents. Mr Enoch Powell has been unsuccessful in seeking legislation to ban such research, but many MPs have similar views and the next episode in the parliamentary campaign has already begun with the publication on January 24 of a private member's Bill very similar to Mr Powell's.

Rival factions in politics and the medical profession have formed their own pressure groups to try to sway public opinion.

Arianna, social rocket

Ken "Kick" Start, independent TV producer, is pitching an idea for a prime time soap opera to network executive Rushing Yardage in the Polo Lounge of the Beverly Hills Hotel.

"I see it as a Joan Collins or Anjelica Huston vehicle - two more Mario", says Start. "It's about this superwoman. Young Beautiful. A genius. She is from Italy. Or Greece. Let's make it Greece.

"She is sent to England to be educated. Oxford or what's that other place? Cambridge. Make it Cambridge. She is the brightest star of her generation. She meets all the Right-People. They love her. She has affairs with some of the Right People. She dumps them.

"She writes. She pontifi-cates. Books, TV, magazines. newspapers. But is she happy? "She goes to New York.

Conquest, conquest all the way. Glitterati. Literati. She meets the Right People. They love her. She has affairs with the Right People. She dumps them. Is she happy?

"Then she has this wild romance with the heir to a gigantic Texas oil fortune. figure we can end the first season with the climactic event - a glittering society wedding with New York's elite donating kidneys to be invited.

"The working title is Arianna.

the story of Arianna Stassinopoulos - the rise and rise as one New York magazine has called her thoroughbred stride in a social steeplechase - may never be the subject of a prime time soap opera but all the ingredients are there: beauty. genius, conflict, passion and, now, enormous wealth.

On Saturday, 300 Right People will gather at the Romanesoue-style Bartholomew's church Manhattan for her ostentatious wedding to Michael Huffington, the bright, handsome 38-year-old heir 10 a Texas oil and gas fortune conservatively estimated at $300 million. As a social event it may rival the forthcoming vedding of Caroline Kennedy.

Bishop Edwin Moore, Episcopal Bishop of New York, will officiate at a ceremony written by Arianna and combining Protestant and Greek strains of Haydn and in a soap opera setting, reports

Peter Fearon

The guest list is apparently an abstract of Who's Who and The Forhes 400 although few names have surfaced. The matron of honor is Ann Getty, wife of Gordon Getty, arguably the world's richest individual. She is also Arianna's patron and surrogate mother, the woman who has beloed guide her over many a social obstacle.

The attendants, to be clad in creations of designer Paul-Louis Orrier, will be Lucky Roosevelt, chief of protocol at the White House; Barbara Walters, the ABC interviewer who has gained more celebrity than the celebrities she interviews: Terry Huffington, the groom's sister and Agapi Stassinopoulos, Arianna's Guests include Princess Michael of Kent, publisher Lord Weidenfeld, Henry and Nancy Kissinger and Mrs Alfred Bloomingdale, widow of the department store millionaire.

The night before the wedding there will be a cosy dinner for 100 at New York's Asia Society and there will be what a member of Arianna's staff calls "a small reception" for the 300 wedding guests at New York's palatial Metropolitan Club.

The wedding is the climax of a glittering career as a single woman in American society and doubtless the start of a publishers may be forgiven for wondering what it will do for her writing career - the manu-script of her Picasso biography is reportedly nearly two years

Arianna came to the United States in 1981 to promote her biography of Maria Callas; subsequently, it was alleged that an already published work on Callas had been plundered for the biography and there was litigation and an out-of-court settlement.

Arianna remained, as Americans say. "unfazed". Her entrée into American society comprised a letter to Lucky Roosevelt and a series traditions to the background of introductions from among others, Lord Weidenfeld and Lord Bernstein.

She was befriended by Bar-bara Walters and began filling index files with Right People telephone numbers, many of them gleaned at events to which she was invited by Ann Getty. She followed up the social leads assiduously, helped by a small staff of personal aides.

Her arrival as a celebrity came with a lengthy, colourful profile in New York magazine. She was pictured gliding about New York harbour in an open speedboat, not a hair out of place: working in her study: greeting guests; even balancing grapes on her head.

When she goes to the ballet". the magazine reported, "she is hailed and cheek kissed by so many people it seems the performance will have to be delayed."

t also noted, prophetically, her "desire to get into society and find a wealthy husband". Arianna has never confirmed that this was indeed her desire, but she has certainly succeeded in finding

She moved to Los Angeles, apparently bent on conquering the west coast as thoroughly as she has New York and Washington.

In September last year she met Michael Huffington at the San Francisco Symphony introduced by the ubiquitous Mrs Getty. Huffington shuns publicity even as Arianna craves it. The Houston Post library department reveals it has "just one iddy biddy clip" on him referring to his nomination as Assistant Secretary for Commerce in 1984. He withdrew.

It is apparently on his insistence that as little inforrevealed about his wedding and that is also one of the reasons why Arianna is not giving interviews prior to her nuptials.

Huffington graduated from Stanford University with a BA in economics and a BSc in engineering and, reflecting the fact that oil millionaires do most of their prospecting on Wall Street, went on to Har-vard Business School for an MBA. He is a senior executive in his father's company.

It is not a biography to set pulses racing among Dallas scriptwriters, but it has the aura of money and status. Arianna can supply enough of the rest to keep the show in the ratings long after the opening

FIRST PERSON

Last November, needing new curtains for the living room, I fell in love with a glazed chintz in Liberty's East India range. The local shop measured up and estimated, and I doly ordered. At first I was told the fabric was out of stock but would be in by the end of December. My hopes of getting the curtains up for Christmas were dashed, but never mind.

At the beginning of April, I'm still waiting. The material has not yet arrived in the shop. To add insult to injury, I am informed that there will be a price rise when the fabric is eventually delivered. In the meantime, another room needed curtains. I found just the stuff, again a glazed chintz — yes, I'm a convert, too — in the Colefax and Fowler range. The shop rather shamefacedly rang to say there was a 10-week wait for this particular design and that I could expect it to arrive round the end of May. A neighbour, also doing up her house, told use she had to wait four months for some curtains for a bedroom. She too had ordered British fabric. Was all this just bad luck. an anhappy coincidence, or is there something less than 100 per cent efficientabout the British furnishing industry? It seems it is the latter. In fact, my neighbour and I can count ourselves among the fortunate ones. Delays of six months, apparently, are not country where there are just uncommon, and some people five vat (a form of dyeing) are now having to wait up to printers left, and we have to go two and a half years for certain special designs. Such is the demand that our fabrics industry, run on distinctly cottage like lines, simply cannot cope. Heary Greenfield of Colefax and Fowler told me: "Everybody wants glazed chintz. Business has doubled in the past two years and the ma-chinery and staffing levels are inadequate to deal with the new demand." With threeand-a-half million people unask, why don't they take more people on and get more machinery? "Just lately", Mr Greenfield continued, "there has been an absolute glut of orders. We, like most fabric firms, have to rely on a few small fabric printers, who quickly fill up with work. We all have to wait our turn,"

Alison Richards, buying di-rector of Habitat, confessed that she is often in despair about the British furnishin industry. She said: "On the whose, British manufacturers are absolutely terrible, really "Once they quote a deliver, time, you find they rarely stick to it. The casual system does bearify us. but we've just had to get used to it. These delivery dates are a problem throughout the whole home furnishing industry in this country. Mannfacturers may quote March 1, but often May 1 will do. It's got to the point where you are actually surprised if it does "At Habitat we like to buy to whichever firm is behaving itself at the time. "It's true there is now a huge demand, but so many British firms are living in the past. In the days when retailers could carry a lot of stock, it didn't matter so much, but most like to offer a large selection and so they can now only have samples in the shop. "As a large high street chain we have slightly more muscle but, even so, we have to wait a iong time. Unlike foreign firms, British companies don't appear to want to expand and grow. Their attitude seems to be that if they've got enough work and a full order book, why should they worry about getting more orders? You've got me on my hobby horse now", she added apoloetically. Liberty, on the other hand, were distinctly huffy over any suggestion that there could be something wrong with the British furnishing trade. Their official spokesman said: "We have 189 designs, and at any one time, 90 per cent will be available. There have been some technical difficulties with a particular design (the one I ordered, naturally) and twice we've had to reject batches. We are still trying to get it right. Perhaps I'm being particularly impatient. but it seems to me that four months is an awfully long time to wait.

Labour: how real the revival?

Fulham opens a series of key by-elections tomorrow. George Brock reports on the signals coming from the constituencies

If, as all the poils suggest. Labour wins tomorrow's by-election in Fulham, the result will be rapidly projected into numbers of seats to be won and lost at the next general election. This post-result ritual has always been an inexact science because of the distortions caused by the special conditions of a by-election; threeparty politics makes these predictions even more unreliable. With more choices available to the floating voter, the exact way in which those decisions are made is of unprecedented importance.

Fulham is only the first of three byelections due this spring. The other two, in West Derbyshire and Ryedale, look likely to be held alongside the council elections of May 8. Will these very different seats confirm or confound the predictions made after Fulham? A large enough margin of victory will make an outright Labour victory next time seem closer. The three lines on the opinion poll graphs are bunched tightly together at the moment, just as they were in early 1982 before the Falklands war pulled them violently apart. The key issue now is how many Conservative defectors there will be and whether they will go to Labour or the Alliance.

All three by-elections will reveal not only fresh clues about where the votes are going but also why. The Times commissioned Market & Opinion Research International (MORI) to conduct six in-depth discussion groups among voters in these constituencies who are thinking of changing their allegiance. What are the underlying issues, we wanted to know, that will move votes? There are two current interpretations of Labour's performance in the opinion polls. One holds that with a number of temporary problems behind it, the party is steadily reasserting its natural claim to be the only opposition to the Tories. With Michael Foot replaced by Neil Kinnock, the anti-Militant purge under way and party organization revamped. this theory goes, Labour can boldly go for an outright majority, profiting from the unpopularity of Thatcherism. The Alliance may take votes from the Tories but it will do little damage in the Labour beartlands of the north and the cities. The counter-argument to this holds that these successes are mostly on the surface. Kinnock may be likeable, according to the voters, but he is untried and thought likely to be ineffectual. Dislodging Militant, if possible at all, will be a long and unpleasant business. Party reorganization amounts to updating the party's marketing operation in order to provide a more effective disguise for ideological disunity. According to La Stampa, Denis Healey appar- affected the government's standing in the ently agrees with some of this interpretation. The extent to which voters lean towards either of these feelings about Labour will help deter-mine the division of the spoils - the votes leaving the Tories. With voters continuing volatile and unpredictable, there is much still to play for.

The opinion polls of the last six months show Labour's vote holding generally steady, with most of the movement between the Conservatives and the Alliance. The strongest and clearest impression left by our groups was of the continuing appeal of the centre ground. What political scientists centre ground. What political scientists call "negative" voting (choosing against something disliked rather than for something liked) seems to dominate, as it mainly did in the 1983 election.

A travelling stable lad in Ryedale voiced the creed of the negative, discontant of the could grad up the co tented mid-term voter who could end up anywhere on the political spectrum. Mrs Thatcher is not far off being a dictator. Kinnock is the lesser of two evils, I suppose. She's going too far and he's not going far enough . . . I might vote Liberal this time."

Short-sighted and signs of slipping

It was central to Mrs Thatcher's electoral appeal that she did not look or sound like a stereotyped Conservative, and thus attracted an unsual number of workingclass votes. Both in these groups and in discussion groups commissioned by The Times last autumn on the influence of the "Thatcher Factor", it was clear that her most individual characteristics and achievements were fading in the public memory. Nobody appeared influenced - to the extent that it might affect the way they vote - by a Falklands factor. Her leadership during the Falklands conflict is spoken of as an episode that is now history.

Nobody mentioned the Prime Minister in connection with any kind of overall economic vision for Britain. Asked to write down descriptive words for each of the party leaders more than one used the expression "short-sighted". Brian, a marble mason living in Fulham and undecided about his vote this week: "I think her sternness has stopped us slipping further and further down, but I think she's come to a point now, I don't know whether she can improve it Maybe she might start to slip down."

The Westland affair may not have polls, but it has coloured views of what goes on in the Cabinet room. "Margaret Thatcher had such a lot of good ideas when she was starting ... She's gone over the top. She's right regardless of what her ministers say." (Sandy, self-employed cleaner, Matiock). A Ryedale group was asked how they would describe the Thatcher era to their grandchildren: "Dominated chaos ... steady erosion of the things that matter, health, education, the elderly and jobs . . . law of the jungle . . . selling off assets ... she just had faith in ourselves some voices talking about her is the sense that she has become a politician like all the others. But Mrs Thatcher is not the issue she was; not every defecting Conservative is fleeing from her; her party's problems are more general. The Tories are noticeably more and more associated with sectional interest, the defence of money and class. References to huge City salaries were frequent; a Fulham housewife who had voted Tory in 1983, conflating innuendo

about shady goings on over Westland and in her country." In the weariness of and financial scandals, described Conservative politicians as "corrupt". Sue, a clerical officer in Fulham remembered the quotation on the steps of Downing Street in 1979: "Mrs Thatcher quotes from St Francis of Assisi when she's saying we'll bring harmony. Its more like to those who have shall be given, to those who have not shall be taken away.

Alan, a Youth Training Scheme supervisor in Matlock, observed that when his groups of youngsters discussed politics, there were mysteriously few Labour voices, "Next year's voters" were all planning to vote either Conservative or Liberal. Behind the frequent, and traditional, voters' complaints about the "extremism" of politicians on the furthest right and left seems to lie a large measure of acceptance of much early Thatcher rhetoric and change, but with significant exceptions which have become increasingly important as the second term has unfolded. How far floating voters travel back across the political spectrum - whether they stop company with Mrs Thatcher, for whom they voted in 1979 and 1983.

Mrs Thatcher's changes, particularly privatization, have made those leaning towards the Alliance create a new informal definition of what should remain in communal hands. Few people made much of the plan to privatize British Gas, but several picked out the water privatization plans for special condemnation ("you can't make money on the essential services"). The same people, who will probably have had few strong feelings about some privatization and approved some measure of economic stimulation, feel increasingly strongly about health service cuts, and perhaps strongest of all about education. In the Fulham middle-class group, Jerry was defending the forcing of technological change on the labour force in order that Britain should remain competitive. Yes, said Sue, but look what she's doing to the universities: "there won't be anybody to get near the new technology,"

A trickle back in both directions

In these respects, the middle-class and middle-ground voters we talked to in all three constituencies fit the pattern which some recent research has shown to be the profile of the natural Alliance constituency. Its heartland seems to consist of people with economic views to the right of the Labour party, in tune with some, if not all of Mrs Thatcher's economic reforms but with views on social, foreign and defence affairs well to the left of the Conservative positions. But these groups cast doubt on how far these instincts have been fused into anything which could be called a set of slogans, let alone a philosophy.

The overwhelming impression left by the floaters of the centre was of people holding a set of strong views about what they wanted to avoid rather than the society they wanted to create. Not only will some gravitate back to Labour, but a proportion will, in the end, stay with the

But some of the same seemed to apply to socialism as well. Those people drifting back to traditional Labour loyalties after taking temporary refuge with the Alliance said they were doing so without necessarily being convinced that the new Kinnock crusade against Militant will succeed, although all wanted Militants expelled.

The overall picture of Kinnock - sincere but weak and inexperienced suggests that the major issue he will confront at an election is a variant of the problem which underlay much of Labour's difficulty in 1983. Do the voters believe that Labour can achieve the promises of the manifesto?

This question is at the heart of the in the centre or cross all the way back to

Labour - seems to be determined by whether Labour could affect the figures

Nick, a young unemployed man in Ryedale: If I could have voted last time. it would have been a case of eanie meanie miney mo. I still don't feel I know enough about the main parties to know, so I'd do it just the same way unless someone came to me and told me about politics. Obviously jobs are the main thing as far as someone like me is concerned. I suppose that if any party can do something about that it would be Labour." But for each Nick there are several voices acknowledging either that new technology makes high unemployment likely for good or that Britain paid itself uncompetitive wages for 100 long. That leaves the two principal issues otherwise mentioned most frequently as reasons for voting against the Conservatives as perceived cuts in health and education. On these two fronts, the Alliance seem as well placed to gain as Labour, the natural constituencies for each party are both consumers of the services and the Alliance has not suffered from much division or vagueness on the subject. Unemployment remains a potential mover of a great many votes, but not until Labour overcomes the credibility gap more decisively than it has so far or until the figures take a dramatic turn for better or worse.

The Alliance advantage here is that middle-class consumers of health services and education facilities may be more likely to be more sensitive and active over changes than their working-class counterparts; but they are less likely to have unemployed people in their families.

Labour faces a difficult tactical and strategic dilemma. One of the most tempting ways for the party to seek an overall majority is to consolidate its hold on its traditional centres of strength in the north. If its vote rises a little above last time and, in addition, the Alliance makes heavy inroads into the Tory vote in the south, Labour could win with a relatively low proportion of the vote. Its results in the south could safely ignored. But this would shrink Labour's base into only a section of the country and would run contrary to its ambition to remain a national force - an aim enshrined in the target list of marginals all over the country prepared by the shadow cabinet election strategist, Robin Cook.

Last year a close adviser to Neil Kinnock remarked that whatever polls and politicians said in the meanwhile and in public, Labour's essential task at the next election was to remain a national political force. Ryedale and West Derbyshire - although they will now be woodd to vote tactically for the Alliance - are test cases: in the last 20 years (during which both constituencies have changed their borders), the Labour vote has halved in West Derbyshire and been quartered in Ryedale. Labour's problems, whatever the polls say, remain

After Fulham, the battle for the beauty spots

Even in the most private and Liberals' 27.1 per cent (14,370), fearful of Tory vocabularies the and the Conservatives' 55.9 per word defeat does not crop up when the constituencies of West Derbyshire and Ryedale in North Yorkshire come under scrutiny, as they are now in the run-up to their respective by-elections. Both, on the face of it, are safe, solid and blamelessly rural, and long the preserve of two great parliamentary families. Until parliamentary families. shortly before the Second World War West Derbyshire was fre-quently represented by the Mar-quess of Hartington, son and heir f the leading local aristocrat, the Dake of Devonshire. The first and last - time the voters rebelled was to return one Charlie White as a Common Wealther in 1944 and as a Labour candidate the following year. Since then an anbroken line of Tories has commuted to West-minster from this spectacularly beautiful area of the Derbyshire Peaks which, in the last boundary redistribution, acquired Belper, represented for 25 years by Harold occasioned by the death of the MP. John Spence, West Derby-shire is vacant because Matthew Parris, the young Tory incumbent since 1979, is leaving to take first the Chiltern Hundreds, which is standard practise for a resigning MP, and then the Walden Millions, which is not. While West Derbyshire is all hills and jagged clefts, Ryedale has its share of flatlands, traversed at leisure by the broad ribbon of the River Derwent, which meanders between sedate stone market towns like Malton and Norton.For many years Ryedale was held by the Turton family, the last parliamentary scion of which sat for 29 years from 1945 to 1979. In terms of sheer acreage, the local government district of Ryedale is the largest in England, and the new parliamentary constitneacy takes in almost the whole of that district while also stretching westwards to Easingwold in the Vale of York and eastwards to Filey on the Scarborough coast a distance of about 50 niles. Like West Derbyshire it claims some of the finest scenery in England,(if you like that sort of thing), taking in a swathe of the brooding and treeless North York Moors. Again like West Derbyshire, it has to make an accommodation between the not always compatible interests of tourism and agriculture.

Wilson's deputy, George Brown.

Despite this acquisition Labour could still attract only 17.1 per cent of the vote at the 1983 general election compared with the cent (29,695).

Yorkshire is a scene of small but gathering change. Farming and its may still hold sway, what with the bacon and sausage factories at Norton and the Westlers hot dog plant at Amotherby, but there is also a growing influx, abetted by the district and county councils, of new industrial estates and hightech operations, notably at Malton, Pickering and Clifton.

And at Swinton Grange there is already a company called Spectra Tek making computerized equipment for the monitoring of flow gauges. Many of the new firms are offshoots of larger and more entreached ones, such as Slingsby Engineering at Kirbymooorside.

Bodley loses its head

Devastating news for the Bodley Head: although it has not yet been announced. the publisher of such giants as Graham Greene, Muriel Spark, Alexander Solzhenitsyn and William Trevor - which was due to celebrate its centenary next July - is to merge with its bigger brother, Jonathan Cape. Yesterday a distressed spokesman at Bodley Head saidthe merger had been caused because of "financial reasons" necessitating redundancies in both companies, but stressed that the house would retain its imprint - "Our authors would not contemplate anything else". Chairman Max Reinhardt has agreed to merge virtually every department within the company: production, publicity, rights and copyright editing. The news comes only weeks after I announced the takeover of Lord Forte's publishing empire. Sidgwick and Jackson, by Macmillan.

Extra, extra-dition

The embarrassing muddle surrounding the abortive arrest of IRA suspect Evelyn Glenholmes becomes instantly comprehensible on reading the latest Home Office law book, written for the guidance of local magistrates. It contains 41 "substantive errors" and a lengthy addendum correcting these in the first print run of 40,000. The book, The Sentence of the Court, is circulated to all 26,000 magistrates and is selling like hot cakes to bench and judiciary. The proof errors are indeed unfortunate," said a Home Office spokesman.

A TV advertisement starring Clive James standing next to a Yorkshire pudding from which a Yorkshire terrier's head protrudes, has been banned by the IBA on grounds of taste. The ad was intended to promote the Observer, for which James is a columnist, and carried the words "Instead of Yorkshire pudding, do something different." The IBA tell me it feared it would prove distasteful to all the Barbara Woodhouses. The Observer duly produced a tasteful substitute, but disaster struck again; LWT decided to ban it, saying James cannot appear in a commercial on the same night as his new Saturday chat show. As a result, the Observer has had to shelve its £250,000 James promotion. All embarrassing for Roger Harrison, who is both chief executive of the Observer and an LWT director.

Self-inflicted wounds

Port of Spain In the past two or three weeks West Indian newspapers have frequently car-ried photographs of former England batsmen out here for the cricket. Yesterday it was the rubicund face of Colin Milburn that decorated the back page of the Trinidad Guardian. The captions are much the same. This time it was: "Could Milburn's smile mean that he feels he could handle the West Indian bowling better than England's current crop of batsmen are doing?

It so happens that Milburn might well have done so. As a fearless hooker and cutter of the ball he might even have enjoyed the challenge, and I can think of few batsmen of whom that could be said. To put it more evocatively, how would the great Australian Don Bradman have coped? With an average in test cricket of 99.94, he was the most prodigious runmaking machine the game has known. The other day he presented to an Adelaide museum the placard from a

London evening paper of the 1930s which carried the two words "HE'S OUT". That was the extent to which he dominated every match in which he In 1932-33, in an attempt to subjugate Bradman, England devised body-line bowling, a ruthless method of attack aimed more at the batsman than the stumps. The result? Bradman's average was cut from 139 - when the two sides had met in 1930 - to a mere 56. And body-line was undoubtedly less remorse-

next year a short series of matches between the West Indies and the Rest of the World. If one snag in the way of it is the crowded international programme, another would almost certainly be the reluctance of many leading batsmen to subject themselves unnecessarily to a battering from Marshall, Patterson and the rest. West Indies would start as favourites to win, at any rate on the type of pitches which put such a premium on various fast bowling and with Rafferty's rules applied as to what is allowed in the way of short-pitched bowling.

It should be clear from this that David.

Gower's side has faced a formidable and at times dangerous task. I saw recently that Jeff Dujon, the West Indian wicketkeeper, was critical of the methods being used by England's batsmen. He thought they should take a leaf out of New Zealander Jeremy Coney's book by "getting into line". In theory, of course, Dujon is right, but the fact remains that Coney ended his only series in the West Indies with a badly broken arm. Later this year England go to Australia where their technical shortcomings will be less ruthlessly exposed. They will find cricket rather fun again, and the shattered noses, fractured thumbs and disintegration of this tour will have had time to mend.

I shall enjoy that, but only if the lessons of the last few depressing weeks have been absorbed. There may be no adequate way of preparing in advance for a tour of the West Indies, because the game that is to be played is played nowhere else. Indoor nets are not enough, nor physical jerks. At the same time, in many respects the England side has brought the troubles upon itself. Their practising has been hopelessly inadequate and their training nothing like as hard as their opponents, and for that it is no good blaming, as they do, the facilities. Much more imagination could and should have been shown in making the best of what has been available, or finding something better. Geoff Boycott did it when he was here for a couple of

This is something like the 30th tour I have reported in the past 36 years, and never have I seen such a lack of what the modern player so prides himself on possessing - professionalism. That Tim Robinson can lie for hours in the baking sun by the hotel swimming pool on the eve of a test match, his energy being sapped by the minute, is beyond comprehension. Why was he not working on the obvious batting flaw which has been his undoing? That Gower could go sailing when England were losing their opening match, or that Neil Foster could bring himself to saunter off for golf and others could go to the beach instead of when they had done nothing for several days after the loss of the third test match, is lamentable.
It has seemed at times as though discipline and firm leadership are considered to be of no account. In fact, they were never more needed. At the same time, I think even Bradman would have struggled for runs.

LAND OF SMILES

Mr Yasuhiro Nakasone, promotion agencies have ings would be deeply unpopu-Japan's prime minister, is anxious to please - or at least appease - his free world trading partners. Nothing could be more embarrassing than for the host nation to find next, abroad where they used to month's economic summit in-Tokyo dominated by more querulous European and North American threats over Japan's still-rising trade surplus. He would much prefer some mutual back-slapping over inflation, falling interest rates and currency adjustments to prepare the ground for worthy sentiments on financial help for the third world - the new focus of Japanese foreign policy as the second largest economy becomes the world's largest creditor nation. The United States and Western Europe will not easily be satisfied however.

The most important condition for reducing Japan's surpluses and its dependence on export growth has been put in place by the 30 per cent rise of the yen against the dollar. But the effects will not show through in Japan's trade fig-ures nearly fast enough to satisfy its critics. Improving terms of trade and falling oil import costs will boost the immediate surplus. In any case, Europe and North America have become convinced that Japan's competitive success stems ultimately from fundamental but somehow unfair features of its economic structure that must be changed to overcome political strains on trade.

In response, Mr Nakasone has produced a series of packages that have yet to deliver. Official non-tariff barriers Increased spending on housing have followed formal tariffs: and public works is overdue. into the dustbin. Export Taxing returns on small sav-

The report of the special committee of establishment figures under former Bank of Japan governor Mr. Harno Maekawa, now issued for maximum public relations effect in front of the summit. sive proposals so far to substitute consumption for exports as the engine of the economy, even if few of its details are new. They seek to stimulate home demand by government spending, by removing controls on housing and construction, and above all by encouraging Japanese people to saye less, work less and spend more, particularly on imports.

The importance of this report lies more in its reception at home than in summit public relations. For it gives the backing for Mr Nakasone or his successor to push through policies that run counter to the values of hard work and thrift instilled in Japanese society since the Meiji revolution. The message is as bizarre to the average Japanese as it would to Britons used to quite different exhortations.

Some features are clearly more practical than others.

lar. The more positive changes are in any case likely to come about as a result of yen time. A recent long-term forecast, anticipating the change of tack, concluded that Japan would reach trade balance by around 1995.

Even then, Europeans may be disappointed at the lack of growth of manufactured exports to Japan, unless there is a sudden mass conversion to learning the Japanese language. Demands for Japan to quantify targets for manufactured imports may well continue to go unanswered. They presents the most comprehen- could be met in the short run only by increased state intervention and public spending. It may be no bad thing, however, for some of the demands of Japan's summit partners to be left unsatisfied. The call for Japan to fall in step with the mature economies of Europe and North America owes more to the imbalance between Japan's economic strength and its political weakness than to sense.

> Japan has succeeded to excess by sticking to the Victorian virtues of Samuel Smiles that its citizens absorbed a hundred years ago, but which have been cast aside in Europe in favour of consuming on credit at rising interest rates at the expense of investment and employment. These are just the virtues needed in poor countries if they are to develop. If Japan should adopt Western ways, there are plenty of others adopting the Japanese way to discomfit the successors of the summitteers in Tokyo.

The UGC and now NAB have been allowed to assert that there is an irreducible minimum cost per student. The arithmetic is simple. Unit costs cannot be reduced, so to deliver a Treasury-ordered aggregate, across-the-board cuts in places must follow. An alternative higher education policy would have examined much more critically the "unit of resource" argument. That would have led to questioning some deeply-entrenched assumptions: about academics' use of their time, and the balance of research and teaching.

A CASE FOR COMMERCIAL COMPETITION

responsible for allocating the £240 million contract on two auxiliary oil vessels, for which both Swan Hunter of Typeside and Harland and Woiff of Belfast have submitted tenders, yesterday postponed a decision on the matter. Ministers are now expected to take a further two weeks to make their choice It is a prudent delay. Swan Hunter's coup in the early hours of yesterday morning, in which the company's executives themselves launched the frigate Coventry, thereby beating a strike and meeting the Navy's deadline, had created an atmosphere in which the proper commercial comparisons seemed unseasonably cold. It evoked both nostalgia for the escape of HMS Amethyst along the Yangtse and Thatcherite admiration for the dash and spirit of the new entrepreneurs of privatization. If the government proved capable of rising above these appeals to its sensibilities (and, perhaps more important, to the sensibilities of its supporters), the political significance of both shipyards could hardly escape it. Both are in areas of distressingly high unemployment. But as the Chairman of proventrack record in naval Swan Hunter pointed out in a shipbuilding. But there would letter to this newspaper, un- be little point in competitive employment on Tyneside is tendering if the traditional now higher than in Belfast, suppliers were automatically And whereas sympathy for the chosen. New entrants into the unemployed of the North-East market deserve an even is undiluted, the seemingly chance.

The Cabinet committee endless crisis in Ulster, currently dramatized by the 1ttacks on the RUC, has eroded public support for measures to alleviate economic problems there. The name of De Lorean reminds us that there has, after all, been a plethora of such measures in the last few years. If it were simply a choice between assisting Tyneside or Belfast, popular sympathy would lean in favour of Tyneside.

But, as the managements of both shipyards concede. awarding a defense contract should not be a matter of charity. It should aim at obtaining the best product at the cheapest price. That means, in practice, a system of competitive tendering namely, choosing the company which puts in the lowest tender while it also meets the specifications laid down by the Ministry of Defense. In this instance, Harland and Wolff has put in what is at face value the lowest tender. Swan Hunter advances several arguments - some substantial, some less so - to urge its rejection nonetheless. The company asserts, for instance, that the Ministry should rely on companies like itself with a recent,

Swan Hunter also argues that its expectation of gaining this contract was included in the terms on which the present management arranged its buyout. But that claim treats the contract as a disguised subsidy which is utterly inconsistent with Swan Hunter's main argument that Harland and Wolff's tender benefits from the general subsidy of £37 million it has received over the last 11 months.

Swan Hunter concedes that a team of independent accountants has certified that their rival's tender price has been sealed off from this general subsidy. It goes on to make the point, however, that the nationalised shipyard will inevitably call upon the taxpayer to meet its losses if the project overruns. There is, in short, an implicit subsidy in any tender from a nationalised industry.

That argument is not without merit. It is, indeed, the main argument for privatization. For as long as nationalized industries are with us, however, the government cannot automatically reject their tendering for particular contracts on the general grounds that they might overrun. What it can - and in this case should -- do is satisfy itself that the company can perform the contract successfully by a rigorous and open investigation and set real penalties for non-fulfilment. Having done that, it should award the contract on plain commercial grounds.

How proposed poly axe will fall From the Secretary of State for number of student places needs to Education and Science Sir. Today's front page report about cuts in places for students at polytechnics proposed by the Na-tional Advisory Body (NAB) gave an incomplete account of the position and will cause an unnecessary degree of alarm among students and their parents.

Your Education Correspondent wrote that "the cuts result from a decision taken by the committee of the NAB". No such decisions have been taken. At this stage the committee, which is chaired by my ministerial colleague, Mr George Walden, MP, and whose majority membership is representative of local authorities, has done no more than make a single guess about the likely level of public funding in 1987-88. De-cisions on the level of funding will not be taken by the Government until later this year. Nevertheless, on the basis of its single guess, the NAB committee has instructed its staff to make proposals keeping the number of student places within a total that would involve no fall in resources per student. The NAB will not advise me until much later this year whether the number of places should be reduced and if so how this might be done by institution and by subject. Decisions on these matters are for the Secretary of State and not the NAB.

There are three points I must make about the approach favoured by the local authority members of the NAB committee. First, I have repeatedly suggested to the NAB that it should not plan on the basis of a single assumption about support from public funds. Of course I acknowledge the consequent difficulty in planning, but it is no more than common sense in such circumstances for any organisation, public or pri-vate, to consider a number of possibilities. This NAB has chosen not to do.

Department of Education and Secondly, there is room for substantial difference of view on Elizabeth House York Road, SEI. whether and to what extent the April 8.

From Admiral Sir Anthony Griffin Sir, Anyone who has the country's maritime interests at heart must feel dismayed at the prospect of either Harland and Wolff or Swan Hunter being severely damaged, or even destroyed, by the handling of a defence contract for two auxiliary oil replenishment vessels (AORs)

Both companies are major na-tional assets and the rigid adherence to current defence contract policy could cost the country not only one or two highly talented ign teams and workforces in this area, but also the basis for any future competition.

Bristol 'intolerance'

From Dr Peter W. Thomas Sir, As you observed in your leader of March 28, it is indeed disturbing that "the Association of University Teachers has been so slow to comment publicly on the Vincent case". Disturbing, but not surprising, I fear.

For the AUT is simply not (I say it sadly as a member of over 20 years' standing) what once it was a decent, dull, reticent, responsible, sound professional body through and through. Politicisation by activists, aspiring downward to trade unionism and exploiting legitimate concerns on the way, has taken its toll.

Today the message from HQ is not "long live John Vincent" but welcome to Wapping"! Those three little words are, of course, not the AUT's; but by sending to each of its members a propaganda leaster of that title published by Sogat, NGA, AUEW and NUJ. it has publicly endorsed and reiterated them.

Our secretariat, albeit by proxy, plainly wishes us, in insistent capitals, to "boycott" The News of the World, The Sunday Times, The Times, and, of course, The Sun, with Professor Vincent and his columns to boot.

It is not that the AUT has nothing to say, simply that it is content to let Sogat's slogans speak for it. That, in the aftermath of the vicious attempts to silence the professor in his lecture theatre. is in all conscience a disgrace to the profession.

importance of this argument against the Chancellor's proposal, we summarise below a number of our personal concerns at the way in which the tax is likely to impact on British industry.

 For reasons which have already been well rehearsed in your columns, the effect of the tax will be to close to British companies the large foreign investment markets to which they have increasingly looked for financial support in recent years.

2. The purchase of ADRs and similar securities in British companies by foreign nationals constitutes overseas investment in the UK. Under the new legislation this process will reverse with adverse economic consequences for industry and for the country.
It is an illusion to believe that any significant increase in volume of foreign investment will be made directly through the London market; there are several technical factors which will prevent this happening.

3. The direct use of equity by British companies making foreign acquisitions will involve payment of the tax, making it more difficult for our industry to develop new markets for its products.

4. In foreign markets, especially in the USA, investors are frequently customers. Loss of liquidity in the ADR market will make exporting more difficult for many major British companies as a result of their reduced credibility and visibility.

April 4.

From Dr Bill Holmes Sir, Teachers accuse the public of unfairly equating school vacations with their personal holidays, a charge they deny. Do not the profession now have an opportunity to prove their assertion by undertaking that necessary training for any new examination will be done outside term time?

They might be able to reclaim some of the public's respect, steal a march on the Government, and demonstrate the consistency of that particular argument. Yours faithfully. BILL HOLMES. 4 Rushcliffe Avenue. Radcliffe on Trent, Nottingham.

ON THIS DAY

APRIL 9 1906

Africa in the 19th and early 20th centuries was a field for exploitation by the European powers. Morocco had come under the influence of France, a situation accepted by Britain in return for France's non-intervention in Egypt. A third party, Germany, felt that it should have an interest in Morocco and arranged for a conference to be held to discuss that country's government and economy. It opened in January, 1906 and closed with France's "special position" being recognised. Germany's hopes of any gains came to naught. Our Special Correspondent was Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace.

CLOSE OF THE MOROCCO CONFERENCE. AGREEMENT SIGNED.

nce is at an end, and sincen mutual congratulation is now the order of the day. At 11 o'clock this morning the delegates met as usual in the red hall of the municipal buildings, and for the first time a few favoured outsiders, including the Governor of Gibraltar, had the honour of being present. At a long table covered with red cloth instead of the diplomatic green sat the 25 representatives of 13 Powers, including four Moors clad in spotless white garments and head-ed by the venerable Mahomed al Torres, who, though a Moroccan fficial and comparatively poor, njoys a well-earned reputation for inimpeachable bonesty...

After a few introductory remarks by the president and other customry formalities the Acte Général embodying the results of the Conference was read by one of the Spanish secretaries. It is a long printed document covering 22 folio pages, and is divided into seven chapters, which contain, not a scheme of general reforms for the decrepit Moroccan Empire, as is often erroneously supposed, but merely some modest proposals for the development of European commerce at eight open seaports. My apprehension as to its containing typographical errors prove to be not unfounded. One of these raising a fine for smuggling from 2,000 peseus (£57) to 5,000 pese tas (£142) was considered so serious that an erratum had to be nserted in manuscript at the end f the document, the trivial mistakes in spelling being left uncor-rected. Traces of haste are likewise isible in style, and altogether it is not a document of which diploma tists of the old school would be proud. The only things which remind one of the old school are the raditional consecrated formulas such as the opening "Au nom de Dieu tout puissant." For its defects hasten to add that the secretaries already explained in previous telegrams, is to be sought in the rrepressible impatience of the elegates to escape from their Moorish captivity and spend at least a portion of Holy Week in the oosom of their families . . .

Thus ended the memorable Conference, and, notwithstanding many hours of impatience and anxiety, it seems, on the whole, to have left agreeable impressions, for at the moment of departure every one present appeared anxious to secure a tangible little souvenir of it by appropriating, with the President's gracious permission, a penholder, blotter, calendar or some such thing of trivial value which had been used during the deliberations. What was considered the first prize was an ordinary paper calendar bearing the date Saturday, the 7th of April, 1906, on which all the delegates kindly inscribed their signatures

Now a very few words regarding the results of the Conference, In my telegram of April 1, at the moment when an agreement on the main points had been attained, I transmitted the first impression of the delegates and promised to transmit in a few days their more matured views when the results had been carefully examined and probed. I am now in a position to state that between first impressions and matured views there is very little difference. My appre hensions that the unconcealed joy of the delegates at the prospect of a speedy release from their long Moorish captivity might have made them a little too optimistic have happily not been realized They still think that, considering all the circumstances of the case no one has much reason to omplain . . .

So far, therefore, as the Moroccan question in the narrower sense is concerned the Conference has been a decided success, though we cannot belp feeling that the machinery employed to attain the object in view has been somewhat out of proportion to the requirements of the situation. In diplomacy, as in ordinary life, the employment of a steam-hammer for cracking a walnut implies a lamentable waste of energy. If the whole truth must be told, his Shereetian Majesty has been unceremoniously used as a pawn on the European chessboard. This has been latterly more and more clearly recognized here professor of history at the college from 1962-66. Lloyd took an active part in the affairs of the Navy Records Society - for which he edited two volumes of the papers of Lord Keith - and of the Society for Nautical Research. After holding various of-fices in the latter society, he took over the editorship, at short notice, of the journal,

Perhaps the truth is that even in jubilant or lightweight works Dorati has never compromised his demands for rhythmic precision, lean textures and unsettling dynamic jolts, and that this technical rigour is easily mistaken for a severe interpretation.

This ebullient performance of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony supported such a hy-pothesis. Yet beyond and above this was a huge, robust joviality. It was most obvious in the bustling first movement and in the symphony's final bars: the sudden mock seriousness solemnly undertaken, and then the joke's punchline arriving in a massive, throaty downward roar from cellos and basses. But it was prevalent in less overt forms everywhere.

Riccardo Muti (right), in London for three Philharmonia concerts, talks to John Higgins about his first season as La Scala's music director and the theatre's new recording contract with EMI

Homecoming for a new era

On December 7, the immovable opening date of the Scala season, Riccardo Muti conducts his first opera as music director of the Milan house. The work is Nahucro, and it has been very carefully chosen.

It was Verdi's first major success at La Scala and with it came the start of a new era for him. Muti has of course had his own Milan successes already, not the least of which was the Ernani a few seasons back which he rescued from a wreiched production and turned into a triumph. But he does anticipate a new era both for himself and the theatre. "I'm not arriving carrying an aura about me that everything will alter. In a way I'm coming home. But there will be change:

One of these is a new relationship between EMI and La Scala announced this week. Through the three-year sponsorship, with an option on two further years, of ENI (Agip), Italy's state oil company, there will be a series of recordings with Scala forces, some made live (as in the case of Ernani) and others in the studio. The first of these is La forza del destino, with Freni, Domingo and Zancaparo. This will be in the studio. Verdi's Requiem is to be recorded in the place where it had its first performance, the Church of San Marco, Milan. The next opera is likely to be Verdi again: I vespri siciliani.

At a time when many record companies, despite the success of CD, are cutting back on opera ment by EMI and ENI over the next few years. But Muti also sees it as a means of reestablishing the past. "I want to get back to the days when Karajan, Serafin, De Sabata and others were making great recordings with La Scala. Also in the theatre I want to create a team around me of young musicians in the way that Toscanini had at his side Votto, Gui and - yes,

Nabucco will not be on the ENI sponsorship list for the basic reason that Muti has recorded it already and the CD version is due out from EMI later this summer. However it is likely to provide opportunity in plenty for patriotic display on December 7. "Yes, that side is well known enough: Jerusalem versus Babylon representing Italy against the Austrians. But it can be taken too far. A couple of years ago there was a move to establish the chorus "Va pensiero" as our national anthe But had anyone really looked at the score? It begins sotto voce and when it is all over the High Priest Zaccaria refers to it as "the lamentation of timorous women". What sort of anthem is Nabucco is its fire - it's a storm, it's a tempest. Ernani is more refined, the characters are more deeply analyzed, with the exception of Abigaile, the first great soprano role that Verdi created. There is the prototype of Lady

what I like about

Macbeth, the female who is a combination of bene e male.

Dimitrova is the Abigaile and Bruson sings the title role. The producer is Roberto di Simone, who like Muti was born in Naples. Coincidence? Muti chortles: "Roberto is so Neapolitan that by comparison I might have been born in Scandinavia."

Muti's commitments with La

Scala, together with his music directorship of the Philadelphia Orchestra, mean that his appearances at foreign opera houses, which are not exactly thick on the ground already, are going to become even rarer in the future. One though could well be an Ernani at Covent Garden towards the end of the decade. Is this a peace-offering in return for his rejection of the post of musical director of the London

"No. It is an opera which Covent Garden have asked me to conduct and which hasn't been heard in that house for half a century. I have always regarded Covent Garden as a serious nouse and I do so still. But I need Italy. If I had said 'Yes' to Covent Garden then I would have been forced to uproot to London and that would not have been in my nature. In Milan I am two hours on the autostrada from my home in Ravenna.

"La Scala has come. I hope, at the right time in my career. In 1968 [when Muti was still under 30] I was director of the Maggio Musicale in Florence. We had the chance to chase works that perhaps only just coming back into fashion. Now, twenty years later, or almost, at the Scala I think there is a chance to establish a true Verdi style just as there is now a new Rossini style, to move the orchestra a step forward, to create a cadre of young Italian singers."

And also possibly to create that rarity at La Scala, a Mozart style. Muti plans a new Don Giovanni, directed by Giorgio Strehler and with Thomas Allen in the title role, for 1987 and then has scheduled a month in which the three Da Ponte operas will be seen in repertory.

Muti has been broadening his own repertory at a rapid rate. Scriabin on paper appears to be the new passion: the First Symphony with the Philadelphia is out on EMI this month (EL 27 0270 1) and the Third Symphony was given with the Philharmonia last night. But Muti claims that this devotion goes back to his student days in Vienna when he bought on impulse the scores of all the Scriabin symphonies in a music shop. There remains though one key opera which does not come into the conversation. Otello is waiting in the wings, but there is no mention of Falstaff.

"Falstaff? There are two major works which scare me. The Missa Solemnis is one and Falstaff is the other. Falstaff is a mountain, as far as I am concerned, with its peak way up in the clouds. Tutto nel mondo e burla.' How do you do it?

The evening was not without its moments of anxiety. For some time now it has been worrying to watch the weakening of the muscle at the top of the voice, as if through lack of strong exercise, and with it the inevitable hints of unease in integration. Her Mozart and Schubert in particular, however musically sung, suffered from shaky support: not nerves alone, I think.

One oddity of the piece, which spans 50 years in the lives of the wandering Levines, is that it nowhere acknowledges the existence of the state of Israel. The play opens and ends with a Passover dinner, and in 1980 as in 1930 it presents the Jews as a homeless people perpetually journeying towards a destination where their slavery will Even without this strange omission, the play seems curi-ously detached from the outside world which allegedly is giving the characters such a hard time. You have to consult the programme to discover where and when events are taking place - a necessary procedure, as it opens in Rhodesia in the 1950s then zips back 20 years to Lithuania before winding up in Mugabe's Zimbabwe. Apart from the appearance of two Blacks, it might all be happening in the same country.

The main aim of the piece to examine three strands of Jewish tradition through the story of one family. Chronologically, it begins with their flight to Africa. There are four of them - two sisters and their girlfriend, inviting her to eat husbands - but only three passes. injuries and illness prevented some of the expected castchanges at Covent Garden on Monday, but caused others which had not been foreseen.

The Sons Of Horus had a complete new quartet in the title roles, and David Bintley's choreography proved strongly resilient to new interpretations. I find that the ballet continues to reveal further wealth of detail, both in Bintley's concept and staging and in Peter McGowan's richly-textured score. With a ballet as familiar as Birthday Offering (30 years in the repertory but only 56 performances at Covent Garden - I suppose I must have seen most of them), one has less expectation of new insights, yet they can come

Relatively Speaking Greenwich

Two sets, four scenes, four unimpeachably mitdle-class characters, a plot which runs on low-octane embarrassment: you know where you are with Alan Ayckbourn. Relatively Speaking, his first major West End success, here enjoys first major revival. Alai Strachan's worthy production stays in period (summer 1965), which gives the eye an unexpected shock of recognition in the first-scene set of a London bed-sit. It all looks so mid-1980s, so taste-freak revivalist.

These intimations of modernity are bandsomely crushed by the expositional dialogue between the two young lovers, Greg and Ginny
- of an age, though years apart in experience - whose monthold relationship is overshad-owed by Ginny's former lover,

Police officers investigating the affairs of Johnson Matthey Bankers and its collapse announced yesterday that the Director of Public Prosecutions has decided that there was no evidence to justify charges on four allegations made by Mr Brian Sedgemore, the Labour MP for Hackney South, on the JMB affair.

The announcement came from the City of London police, whose fraud squad officers began an investigation of JMB last summer. They announced late last year that they had found evidence of the control of JMB. traud involving JMB.

The statement vesterday refers to allegations made by Mr Sedgemore involving Mr Mahmeud Sipra and Mr Michael Hepker, chairman of Sumrie Clothes.

The statement said that the Exchequer by Mr Sedgemore. Investments.

The first said that JMB and the Bank of England agreed to release a charge on 1 Chester Terrace. Regents Park, after payment by Mr Sipra of £65,000 when the value of the property would have justified payments of a higher sum.

The second allegation suggested that Bank of England officials acted with impropri-ety before and after their takeover of JMB in relation to the movement of funds on the accounts of Mr Sipra.

The third allegation suggested there were attempts by JMB and the Bank of England to show JMB as a secured creditor of Ardmore Film Studios and thereby obtain traudulent preference in the liquidation of the company.

The fourth allegation claimed that a £1 Bank of England note was illegally police had made a report to the DPP following allegations in support of an alleged option made to the Chancellor of the agreement to buy Ravensbury

TEMPUS Davies still full of ideas for his Next trick

After four years of explosive growth at the Next retailing more highly-rated stores chain, George Davies, its chief executive, is still full of ideas for expansion. His outstanding record of profits growth was continued with yesterday's interim announcement of pretax profit of £13.7 million for the six months to March 31, 41 per cent up on last year.

Next is the bouncing baby which bounced all over its parent, the uninspiring Hep-worth group, so much that the family name was Next began as a specialist retailer of women's apparel, whence it has moved into men's fashion wear and home furnishings. Shoes, accessories and cosmetics are becoming increasingly available in Next stores. In the autumn, lingerie will be added to the range of goods offered and, in 18 months' time, children's Next dabbled in acquisition when it took over the Lord John chain. It is also reliably reported to have considered buying the House of Fraser chain, excluding Harrods, a move which would have taken it into the big league of retailers at a stroke and changed the face of many city high streets. It has now principally decided to grow organically, although the temptations to make an acquisition remain.

Club 24, Next's credit card company, contributes about 25 per cent of pretax profit and lends stability to retailing earnings, which can be very volatile. Financially, the company is extremely strong. Gearing is close to 7 per cent and cash flow more than adequate. Its rating in the low 20s discounts quite a bit of future growth.

Kwik-Fit says this designation would more accurately reflect the retailing nature of its business.

Whatever the sector, Kwik-Fit now has a growth tag. Profits jumped from £4.23 million to £6.63 million before tax last year and there should be good progress again this year.

Though 33 depois were opened the company saw little of the benefit as 22 of them started in the last two months of the year. Kwik-Fit expects to open another 30 this year. Exhausts account for 46 per cent of turnover, tyres for 35 per cent and other products, including radiators, account for the rest.

The latter group is becoming increasingly important as the company introduces a broader range of products. For the longer term it has plans to open up to 100 Car Care centres offering a complete car service. While the cost of new depots should be covered by cash flow from trading, the Car Care project could require special funding, given gearing of 57 per cent. That could be why the company is planning to sell its property portfolio, which has a book value of £11 million. Confirmation of these property disposals should remove fears of a rights issue.

The shares are trading on a modest multiple of 11 times prospective earnings assuming profits of £8.5 million and a slightly higher tax charge.

They should continue to perform well and should be particularly attractive to car owners as they can make use of the 10 per cent discount available to holders of 100

BP/Standard Oil

BP's biggest investment is its 55.5 per cent share in the Standard Oil Company, formerly Sohio. In the financial per cent of its net income of £1.6 billion before extraordiconcern to BP, therefore, but it is a particular worry in the case of Alaskan oil with its high cost of operation.

Extraction costs have fallen recently because Alaskan severence taxes are calculated at 15 per cent of the well-head value, which has fallen. Despite this, they are still esti-mated to be $4.25 per barrel.

Moving the oil across Alaska via the Alyeska pipeline costs another $4.50 a barrel. Between them, Standard Oil and BP own 50 per cent of the pipeline, so the tariff is partly a transfer charge. However, the operating cost of the line and interest on capital amount to about $1.60.

The rest of the journey from Valdez to the refining centres in the Gulf of Mexico and the East Coast of America costs another $3 or so giving a built-up marginal cost to the refiner of nearly $9

North Slope crude is heavi-er and higher in sulphur, so its spot value is approximately 25 cents a barrel lower than West Texas Intermediate, the most frequently quoted US crude. The current spot price of Alaskan crude is therefore about $12 after recent rises. At a delivered cost of nearly $9, Alaskan crude was barely profitable when the spot price was $10 and even though the price has risen to $12, the price is still volatile and profitability remains vulnerable.

Even if the price fell to a level where there was no profit to be made on Alaskan oil, it is unlikely that the Prudhoe Bay field would be closed altogether because of the considerable costs associated with shutting it down and restarting it when the price recovered. For this to happen, there would need to be a prolonged decline to between $7 and $8 per barrel.

Most of Standard Oil's output is disposed of directly or via exchanges into its own refineries at prices of $14 in the Gulf and $13 in the East Coast. Consequently, production profits are being subsidised by the refining and marketing operations, but this will not go on indefinitely. If the price remains low, competition will gradually erode product prices, reducing total profitability.

Even allowing for the timelag while product prices catch up with the lower oil prices, the outlook for Standard Oil's and hence BP's profits is not bright unless oil prices stabilize at higher levels

Battle for

By Derek Harris Industrial Editor The wine market, already worth more than £3.2 billion, s expected to keep growing as the battle between supermar-kets and specialist outlets enters a new phase.

Table wines account for two-thirds of the sales with stronger wines such as ver-mouth and port taking up the remainder.

Among factors fuelling the struggle are changed consumer patterns creating the wine consumption boom and technological developments which have raised the quality and lowered the cost of produc-tion, according to a financial study* by Jordan Surveys. Profit margins, generous by the standards of the food industry, are another factor.

Over the past two decades, wine consumption per head of those aged 15 and over has trebled to 11.4 litres a year, the survey points out. Wine in 1984 accounted for 22.3 per cent of consumer expenditure on drink and was almost equal to spending on spirits.

Grocery chains, after aggressive marketing, have now seized 48.3 per cent of the wine market with specialist outlets like wine merchants accounting for 47.8 per cent. Outlets like hotels and restaurants are responsible for the remainder of sales.

The AGM is further to consider authorising the Board to decide - no later than the following Annual General Meeting - on a convertible bond issue in foreign currency not exceeding 650,000,000 Swedish kronor. The issue-to the exclusion of shareholders' preference rights-would be aimed at the international money market, with the bonds being convertible to non-restricted 'B' shares. In conclusion, a matter raised by a shareholder concerning South Africa will also be taken up.

Notice of attendance

For the right to participate in the meeting, shareholders must notify the Board, at the Company's address in Göteborg, before noon on Thursday 24 April, preferably in writing, of their intention to attend, giving details of name, address, telephone and shareholding. They must also be recorded in the shareholders' register kept by the Securities Register Centre (VPC AB, S-171 18 Solna) by Friday 18 April.

Shareholders with holdings registered in banks or other authorized depositaries must temporarily re-register these in their own name by Priday 18 April to be able to participate in the Annual General Meeting.

Payment of dividends

The Board recommends that shareholders with holdings in the VPC AB records on 6 May be entitled to receive dividends for 1985. Subject to the Board's proposal being accepted by the Annual General Meeting, it is expected that the Securities Register Centre will send out notice of payment to recorded shareholders and listed depositaries on 14 May.

AUA3, the agency appointed by Lloyd's insurance market to close the loss-making PCW syndicates, has requested a meeting with Mr Peter Cameron-Webb, the former managing director of the PCW agency, to try to find out what action he would have taken if he had remained in charge.

Sir lan Morrow, chairman of AUA3, wrote this week to names on former PCW syndicates: "It has been suggested that the losses which affect some of the syndicates under our management would not have occurred if the original PCW management had

We can find no evidence whatsoever to substantiate such a view, but in order to investigate it I have written to Mr Cameron-Webb in the United States to enquire whether he would agree to

Mr Cameron-Webb is alleged to have misappropriated £6.5 million of syndicate funds for his own benefit. He agreed last weekend to pay back $1.5 million (£1 million). The letter also said that the syndicates' accounts at De-cember 31, 1985, would not be ready until the end of June. The accounts are expected to show a much higher loss than the £130 million shown last

Sir Ian believes that proposals for a market settlements could be made in the next few weeks. He said that potential defendants against legal action by PCW names expect names to contribute "a significant amount" to the settlement.

RESIDENTIAL PROPERTY/1

Going, going, gone to auction

Property buying can be the most traumatic as well as the most profitable experience of a person's life; not surprisingly the process can turn a buyer into a ruthless businessman or woman or a gibbering wreck. One of the methods of buying - and selling - a property which cuts short the process is the auction, which not only gives the prospect to both sides of a good price, but adds the attraction of a sudden-death transaction. Though sale by auction forms only a small part of the property market, it is an important part of the business and is adopted more often when the market is in a healthy

So it is interesting that many estate agents and auctioneers are announcing such sales now with regularity, not in all parts of the country but in many areas where prices are steadily rising. The spring too is the best time traditionally for auctions, which explains why the auctioneers are busy polishing their technique.

At this time of the year, after the winter lull, there are not sufficient market indicators to help value the more unusual properties, but there are normally a good many potential buyers looking

Graham Adnitt from the Chester office of Jackson-Stops and Staff admits: With some of the properties coming on to our books, such as redundant farms and cottages, which are the most likely to go to auction. I cannot be sure of valuing them within 10 per cent. I would be surprised if the price was outside that, but it does happen.

He believes that spring is a good time for auctions because buyers then have several good selling months in which to dispose of their own properties. His office of Jackson-Stops and Staff is holding an auction on April 30 at which two intriguing redundant farm houses, both dating from the 17th century, will come under the hammer. One of Cheshire's richest sources of period houses are the farms, as they amalgamate, leaving the farmhouse available for residential use. Hollyhedge, at Weston, near Crewe, is Grade II listed, and has three or four reception rooms, four bedrooms, outbuildings and three acres. Cherry Tree at Barthomley has two reception rooms, five bedrooms and 1/4 acre, also Grade II listed, and both are attractive half-timbered properties.

Guide price for each is £100,000, and there is great interest in them - another reason for an auction, to get the bepossible price.

From an auctioneer's point of view, the decision to take a property to auction depends on the likely demand, whether it is a type for which there will be competition and whether the price level is obvious from recent sales of similar property or difficult because it is an individual property. After all, a property is worth what someone will willingly pay

It is therefore unwise to think, if you able to find a property at a knockdown nation to get what they want. He knows to the auctioneer.

By Christopher Warman Property Correspondent

Suitable cases for auction: Court Farm in Dorset, top, a listed building with outline permission for conversion to two dwellings; Cherry Tree, a redundant farm at Barthomley, Chesbire half-timbered, listed, with farm buildings for conversion to residential use; and some of the outbuildings at Court Farm, Dorset, which has outline permission for three dwellings. They are all properties where the individual can outbid the developer.

too of bidders who have gone above their limit because of the atmosphere of the auction. He says: "You can see furtive glances between husband and wife as they agonize over whether to go on. And there are sometimes tears when the hammer falls, win or lose." Apart from executor sales, where the highest price has to be seen to be achieved to satisfy the interested parties. one of the most popular types of property to come up at auction is the rural property in need of conversion or modernization, where it is not easy to put an accurate price on it. Estate agents Lawrence, based in Crewkerne, Somerset, announce that the traditional season for property auctions will soon be underway, and are starting with an auction next Tuesday.

Among the lots on offer is a traditional barn for conversion at Lower Tytherleigh farm, Axminster, Devon. built of flint with hamstone quoins and a tiled roof. It has planning permission for a single dwelling, and the guide price is £30,000.

Another is a cottage at Crewkerne, which dates from the 19th century, has two bedrooms and needs complete refurbishment. Yours for around £10,000.

Lawrence is offering a Dorset farm-house at South Perrott with 54 acres. Grade II listed, built of stone, with planning permission for conversion into two units. The guide price is £70,000 to

Also in South Perrott is a group of farm buildings of stone and timber with outline permission for conversion to three dwellings. This is the stuff of auctions, with great potential, and they could cost £35,000 to £40,000.

Humberts' Sherborne office are auctioning the former rectory at Catustock, near Dorchester, on May 8 unless it has previously been sold.

Most former rectories sold in the past are the larger period properties, but now the Church Commissioners are selling the replacement postwar modern rectories, of which this is an example. It was built in 1954 of local stone with mullion windows under a tiled roof, and has three reception rooms and four bedrooms.

The house has about 4 acres of gardens, and the auction will be held at the King's Arms Hotel, Dorchester, guide price £75,000 to £85,000.

John Eaton-Terry. Fox and Sons' man in Exeter, looks to the unusual property for auctioning. He says: They are not for ordinary houses. They must be of the highest possible result, but it is sufficient interest for people to bid possible to buy at a more competitive against each other - such as watermills price than in the normal market place. in need of restoration, coach houses in An individual can outbid a developer at picturesque settings and barns for sweepstakes an excellent programme of jumping beckons to Ascot this afternoon and no one should enjoy himself more, in my opinion, than Sheikh Ali Abu Khamsin, the successful Saudi businessman, whose red and black racing colours have commanded such a big following in this country these past few years. My feeling is that the Sheikh could well land a treble, with his winners all coming from different stables. The three that I have in mind are Bolands Cross (2.30), Gaye Brief (3.0) and Half Free

Such is the competition. rough, none of them look like finding it easy, especially the former champion hurdler, Gaye Brief, who is opposed not only by Aonoch, last Saturday's shock conqueror of See You Then, in the Keith Prowse Long Distance Hur-dle, but also by that thorough stayer, Crimson Embers.

If there is a chink in Gaye Brief's armour they will expose it. My feeling is that although Gaye Brief has never raced over as far as three miles, he will relish the dislance. On the two occasionsthat he has gone two and a half miles at Ascot he has looked good and I think that, given a patient ride by of course, it is perfectly possible to argue that if that remarkable result at Aintree was right Aonoch should beat Gaye Brief, After all See You Then did beat Gaye Brief by seven lengths in the Champion Hurdle, whereas Aonoch had the champion two lengths in arrears at Liverpool. Wrongly or right I am convinced that Aonoch was flattered because See You Then did not get the trip. So, I regard Crimson Embers as the main danger over his favourite distance. When he won the Waterford Crystal Stayers' Hurdle at Chelten-ham he had Sheer Gold, Against the Grain, Rising Forest and King's College Boy well beaten at the end.

Nick Gaselee, the Upper Lambourn trainer, has made the Golden Eagle Novices' Chase even more interesting by running Berlin in addition to Bolands Cross, especially as the handicapper puts them just 21b apart in a race at Ascot later this week. And that is precisely the difference between them now in this conditions race.

Both were expected to do well at Cheltenham during the National Hunt Festival, but both failed for different rea-finished up the hill hinted that he was crying out for further, so he should be suited by additional half-mile that they will cover today. But I am still inclined to give Bolands Cross another chance because he impressed me so much when he won over today's course in February and at Kempton twice before that.

Restless Shot will be attempting to win the Peregrine Handicap Chase for the second successive year, but in this instance I am happy to go pap on Half Free over what is undoubtedly his best distance. When he won the Cathcart Challenge Cup at Cheltenham, Half Free had The Mighty

They carried the same weight that day. Now The Mighty Mac has to give Half Free a couple of pounds simply because he has been penalised for winning in the meantime at Huntingdon, where he had Half Free's stable companion, Carved Opal - also a runner today seven lengths behind. The Mighty Mac loves to make all the running. So, too, does Ryeman, so we are assured a real set-to at a loves to come from behind and cut the leaders down at the death. In my opinion Half Free probably has most to fear at these weights from Road-

Half an hour earlier Sweet

Adelaide should win the 1,000 Guineas Trial, sponsored by blistering gallop. But that the BBA, if Tate Gallery is to should suit Half Free, who be taken at all seriously as a fancied contender for this year's 2,000 Guineas. For when Vincent O'Brien's colt won the National Stakes at the Curragh last September Sweet Adelaide was only three lengths behind in third place.

one change to their original under-23 team selection for the game at Twickenham today against Spain. Tim Edbrooke, the Exeter University back row man, replaces John Wells, the Leicester flanker who damaged a rib cartilage during his club's cup defeat against Bath at the weekend.

Edbrooke has been a member of the English Universities team this season and captained the Combined England Students to victory over Wales last month. But it is cruel luck for Wells who has made considerable strides this season. It also deprives England of the understanding between him and Richards, his club No 8, against a Spanish side whose strength is likely to be the

This is the only under-23 fixture this season and has added significance since there are places to be won on England's two-match visit to Italy with a B team in May. That party is likely to be finalized at the weekend and named early next week and is sure to include Redman, the Bath lock who captains England today.

Redman is one of three players in today's team who also played against Spain when the under-23s toured there two years ago. On that occasion, when England beat Spain 16-9, he was joined by Simms and Goodwin; Wells was also a member of the side, as were Morrison and Ward who are on the replacements bench. So, interestingly, was Andrew, who is still qualified for the under-23s but was considered by the sclectors to have had as much pressure rugby this season as he could reasonably handle.

Contact with Spain has been frequent over the last three years. Apart from England's visit in 1984 Wales visited with a B team in 1983 and hosted England have had to make cantered to an 80-9 victory against a country who were subsequently relegated to Group B in the FIRA competition after a play-off with Tunisia.

More recently there was the encounter between England and Spain in the New South Wales international sevens tournament in Sydney when Spain won 24-6, a result which was put into perspective in terms of the 15-a-side game when Spain lost a warm-up match against a combined Devon and Cornwall team at Torquay on Sunday by

Since then they have been joined by three players who were involved in French club championship games on Sunday but one would, nevertheless, look for a convincing victory from England's young hopefuls. the final of the Volvo World Cup in Sweden. which begins with a warm-up class today. No British rider has won this competition - it has gone to the United States five times since it started in 1979 - but this year the British are fielding five of their best riders, including four European team gold medal winners from last year. As Whitaker remarked: "We ought to have a good chance — we have got a lot of good horses between us." Prominent among them is Nick Skelton, with Raffles St

Malcolm Pyrah, lying fifth in the European league, may well do the same and use Diamond Seeker tomorrow and then re-vert to his great partner Towerlands Anglezarke for the next two legs. Towerlands Anglezarke has had only one outing at s'Hertogenbosch in The Netherlands, since Olympia because he became foot-sore on the frozen ground in February.

Whitaker's younger brother. Edinburgh jumping

next year

Edinburgh will stage National Hunt racing next January after completing a new £90,000 track.
This was announced by David McHarg, the clerk of the course, before racing at Ayr yesterday.
"It's my baby and has taken five years to establish," McHarg said. "We will be racing during only two months of the year -December and January - and this course will be the first one to open in Great Britain for 22 years. So far we have been promised four days racing next January, but we are hoping to get more fixtures." McHarg emphasised that despite the bad winter, Edinburgh could have raced on 60 per cent of the days because the track is in close proximity to the sea where conditions are milder. The track will be be set up for a day's racing and dismantled afterwards, thus maximising the use of the ground available and minimising the wear and tear, Phil Tuck, one of our leading jump jockeys, welcomed the news on behalf of his colleagues who have suffered so badly owing to the large number of abandonments He said: "I have never been to Edinburgh but I'm told it is a fair galloping track. It's has got to be tremendous news for all jump jockeys and now we should be able to get some more racing in during the height of the winter. I reckon the recent bad weather has cost me around £2,000."

barred from playing official matches in Mexico, against clubs or other national teams, from April 30. In their latest official circular the international football federation, FIFA, have laid down guidelines to the 24 qualifiers regarding warm-up matches in Mexico, where the tournament starts on May 31. The sides, already prevented from playing in stadiums to be used in the World Cup, will be allowed to play official matches on other grounds in Mexico until the end of this month. From then on only training matches will be permitted, conditions for which are no television coverage, no entry fee and no official or reserve team colours to be worn. When the finals get under way each team will be allowed to hold a 45-minute training session at the relevant stadium on the day before a came and a 20-minute warm-up before the match.

FIFA also announced there would be a charity match between the Americas and a restof-the-world selection at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, California, on Sunday, July 27. Pro-ceeds will go to Mexican earthquake victims.

FIFA place Super League a block on Mexico fear recedes as clubs back reform plan

The third and fourth divi-sion clubs have taken further clubs. If that is the price of steps to avert the growing averting a breakaway then our threat of a breakaway by the first division. At a three-hour meeting in London on Monday the Associate Members accepted nine of the 10 points put forward in a plan of reform by the first division

They would not however, agree to the proposed change in the voting system, giving first division clubs two votes. second division clubs one and the lower division teams just eight between them. In accepting nine proposals, Reg Driv-er, the chairman of Aldershot and the Associate Members' Advisory Committee, warned that it would lead to part-time football and a loss of jobs.

"My club will find the only way to cut our cloth is by having at least some part-time players." he said.

Ian Jones, the chairman of Doncaster Rovers, said: "Our members are being asked to Football League in London on give up £50,000 a year and April 28.

members are willing to accept it. Don't expect us to be joyous about it, though."

The Associate Member clubs will lose about £2½ million a year through the revised share out of the Football League pool, television income and the Milk Cup and FA Cup pool.

The clubs will seek help from the Professional

Footballer's Association regarding players contracts in an attempt to soften the financial blow. They are also asking the first and second division clubs to delay the changes for a year. The threat of a breakaway "super league" has receded after a secret meeting last week when representatives of the second division finally reached agreement with the first division clubs. The ten-point package will be voted on by all 92 clubs at an extraordinary general meeting of the

Hoeness makes a welcome return

Geneva (AP) - West Germany will be missing several leading players when it faces Switzerland today as part of a World Cup warm-up series that has yielded all wins to date. Leading the attack at Basle, is Hoeness the Bayern Munich veteran, who was confident: "We are going to win 3-0 or 3-1." he said. "We have to continue our good series."

The Swiss team includes sev-eral players from Grasshoppers of Zurich, which lost I-0 to the Argentine national squad last week Daniel Jeandupeux, the coach, recently appointed after Switzerland failed to qualify for the World Cup finals, has brought three newcomers into the line-up: Martin Brunner, the goalkeeper, from Grasshoppers of Zurich. whom Jeandupeux hopes to groom into a successor for Karl Engel, of Neuchâtel Xamax, Andre Halter, of Lucerne, and Claude Ryf. of Halter, aged 20, is tearning with Claudio Sulser, the veteran of Grasshoppers, for the attack Ryf, whose club was in this season's UEFA Cup quarterfinals, is expected to combine his defender role with forays up front. Heinz Hermann will organize the midfield.

Franz Beckenbauer, the West German trainer, recalled Hoeness, a tall 33-year-old forward, feared for his headers. into the national squad after a for an unusual front line is Olaf officials said.

One explanation is that Norman began playing at a later age than Lyle, who hit his first shot at the age of three, and Ballesteros and Langer, who began at seven and nine respectively.

in January of 1975. He was 22 and he had struck his first golf hall only three years and two months earlier. He had repre-sented Queensland State at cricket, Australian Rules and Rughy League but he was cap-tivated by golf after caddying for his mother, who had a handicap of three.

"I see myself as being a young recruit," Norman says. "It takes years and years to get the feel. I've worked harder more recently on shots of 100 yards and less. I've been practicing my bunker and chipping shots because my short game lacked maturity. I like the way it is now to win one of the four major and I like the way my game is for "Even so I don't see the majors as the be-all and end-all. It would not mean anything much more to me in strict financial terms if I won one. And if you are a good player then you people will still want you around."

Of his former European classroots colleagues, Norman was most impressed by Ballesteros. He added: "I played with him yesterday and I told him it was great to see him relaxed and smiling again. His ban in Amer-ica is hard but it's a rule. You can't expect to get off if you are booked for speeding. Right now I don't think that he's as sharp. 25 l've seen bim.

BOWLS

Error proves costly for champions

Tony Alicock, the world indoor singles champion, and his partner, David Bryant; were left regretting a tactical error after their surprise defeat on the opening day of the Midland Bank £40,000 world indoor pairs championship at Bourne-mouth on Monday.

The English pair, who are hot favourites for the title, fixed up with Allcock at lead and Bryant at skip - the opposite order they had used when they came within one shot of winning the world outdoor title.

"I missed too many running bowls," Bryant said, "Tony was playing well but I couldn't convert the chances that were offered."

Alloock and Bryant were beaten 4-7, 9-6, 5-7 by Ron Jones and Bill Boettger, of Canada, and Bryant said they would revert to their outdoor order for their remaining two qualifying matches :

Jim Baker, of Belfast, and his Irish international colleague, Irish international colleague, Sammy Allen, were in sparkling form to beat the Australians, Don Peoples and Kenny Williams, 10-2, 8-5. In another surprise, George Souza, from Hong Kong, and Cecil Bransky, of Israel, beat Scotland's Commonwealth Games champions, Willie Wood and David Gourley, 10-3, 2-3

Gourlay, 10-3, 8-3. Yesterday's two remaining matches also produced straight set wins. Peter Belliss and Phil Skoglund, of New Zealand, edged out Welsh pair Terry Sullivan and Russell Evans 9-5, 6-4 and George Source S 6-4, and George Souza, from Hong Kong, and Cecil Bransky, of Israel, beat Scotland's Commonwealth Games champions Willie Wood and David Gourlay 10-3, 8-3.

eAt the end of last week's film in David Munro's two-part documentary series THE FOUR HORSEMEN, I was left feeling so shattered by the images of war-savaged humanity that it seemed there was that it seemed there was nothing more the dread riders could justifiably inflict on me in the way of horror. I was wrong. Tonight, (ITV.9.00), they ride again. The difference this time is that they wear smartly-cut suits and smile a fot, and shake hands as they seal bargains. They are the arms salesmen and the neo-coliticians. They are they are the arms satesment and the geo-politicians. They are lucky to have hands. Thanks to them, there are thousands men, mere are mousarids who don't. No legs, either, or skin on their bodies, or sight.
But at least they are alive to whimper in their pain. As Munro's cameras pan across an endless pile of human skulls,

But anyone who thought the latest recruit to the new trend in football management would be dressed in extravagant, modern gear was disappointed. The imposing Souness, who has three more games to play for Sampdoria before he joins Rangers, does indeed look like an Italian film star, tanned and handsome, but he wore the sober blue blazer, grey flannels and red, white and blue club tie of Rangers to be every inch a true

"Will you sign a Catholic player?"There was no humour in his reply. How could I possibly have taken this job if I was not allowed to sign any player I wanted? How could I have gone home to my wife, Danielle, who is a Catholic, and told her I was unable to take on a good player because Many felt that if Souness does bring a Catholic to Rangers that will be more important for the image of the club than winning the European Cup. Souness's honesty was appealing. "Of course I can't promise success," he said. "Of course I would like to follow in the footsteps of my friend, Kenny Dalglish, and do as well in management as he has so far, but don't forget that mine is a far more difficult job than Kenny's." Although Souness has for years lived glamorously at the
